

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

H N E H I P H

KD 19316

OCTOBER, 1854.

A LIST OF BOOKS

PUBLISHED BY

EDWARD MOXON, DOVER STREET.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES, and UNIVERSAL REFERENCE, relating to all Ages and Nations; comprehending every Remarkable Occurrence, Ancient and Modern—the Foundation, Laws, and Governments of Countries—their Progress in Civilisation, Industry, and Science—their Achievements in Arms; the Political and Social Transactions of the British Empire—its Civil, Military, and Religious Institutions—the Origin and Advance of Human Arts and Inventions, with copious details of England, Scotland, and Ireland. The whole comprehending a body of Information, Classical, Political, and Domestic, from the earliest accounts to the present time. SIXTH EDITION. In one volume 8vo, price 18s. cloth.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.
The Text revised by the Rev. ALEXANDER DYCE. In six volumes, demy 8vo. In the Press.

SHARPE'S HISTORY OF EGYPT, from the Earliest Times till the Conquest by the Arabs in A.D. 640. THIRD EDITION. In two volumes 8vo, price 16s. cloth.

CAPTAIN BASIL HALL'S FRAGMENTS OF VOYAGES AND TRAVELS. A NEW EDITION. In one volume 8vo, price 10s. 6d. cloth.

MEMOIRS OF WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. By CHRISTOPHER WORDSWORTH, D.D., Canon of Westminster. In two volumes 8vo, price 30s. cloth.

By the AUTHOR OF "TWO YEARS BEFORE THE MAST."

DANA'S SEAMAN'S MANUAL; containing a Treatise on Practical Seamanship, with Plates; a Dictionary of Sea Terms; Customs and Usages of the Merchant Service; Laws relating to the Practical Duties of Master and Mariners. SIXTH EDITION, revised and corrected in accordance with the most recent Acts of Parliament, by J. H. BROWN, Esq., Registrar-General of Merchant Seamen. Price 5s. cloth.

AN ESSAY, CRITICAL AND HISTORICAL, ON THE ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY OF SCOTLAND SINCE THE REFORMATION. By the DUKE OF ARGYLL. SECOND EDITION. Price 5s. cloth.

GOETHE'S FAUST. Translated into English Prose, with Notes. By A. HAYWARD, Esq. FIFTH EDITION. Price 2s. 6d. sewed, or 3s. 6d. cloth, gilt edges.

TALFOURD'S VACATION RAMBLES; comprising the Recollections of Three Continental Tours, in the Vacations of 1841, 1842, and 1843. THIRD EDITION. Price 5s. cloth.

TALFOURD'S DRAMATIC WORKS. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

TAYLOR'S PHILIP VAN ARTEVELDE. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

TAYLOR'S EDWIN THE FAIR; ISAAC COMENIUS; The Eve of the Conquest, and other Poems. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

LANDOR'S WORKS.

THE WORKS OF WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

Including the Imaginary Conversations, with a New and Original Series; Pericles and Aspasia; Examination of Shakespeare; Pentameron of Boccaccio and Petrarca; Hellenics; Tragedies; and Poems. With many large additions throughout, and the author's last corrections. In two volumes, medium 8vo, price 32s. cloth.

LANDOR'S IMAGINARY CONVERSATIONS OF GREEKS AND ROMANS. In one volume, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d. cloth.

LANDOR'S LAST FRUIT OFF AN OLD TREE.
In one volume, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d. cloth.

LANDOR'S HELLENICS. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

DISRAELI'S WORKS.DISRAELI'S CURIOSITIES OF LITERATURE.

FOURTEENTH EDITION. With a View of the Character and Writings of the AUTHOR. By his Son, the Right Hon. B. DISRAELI, M.P. In three volumes 8vo, with Portraits, &c. Price 42*s.* cloth.

DISRAELI'S CURIOSITIES OF LITERATURE.

A NEW EDITION. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 16*s.* cloth.

DISRAELI'S MISCELLANIES OF LITERATURE. In one volume 8vo, with Vignette, price 14*s.* cloth.

CONTENTS:

1. Literary Miscellanies.—2. Quarrels of Authors.—3. Calamities of Authors.—4. The Literary Character.—5. Character of James the First.

LAMB'S WORKS.THE WORKS OF CHARLES LAMB. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 16*s.* cloth.

CONTENTS:

1. The Letters of Charles Lamb, with a Sketch of his Life. By Sir T. N. TALFOURD.—2. Final Memorials of Charles Lamb; consisting chiefly of his Letters not before published, with Sketches of some of his Companions. By Sir T. N. TALFOURD.—3. The Essays of Elia.—4. Rosamund Gray, Recollections of Christ's Hospital, Poems, &c.

THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6*s.* cloth.HOOD'S WORKS.*HOOD'S POEMS. SIXTH EDITION. Price 7*s.* cloth.HOOD'S POEMS OF WIT AND HUMOUR. FIFTH EDITION. Price 4*s.* cloth.HOOD'S OWN; OR LAUGHTER FROM YEAR TO YEAR. A NEW EDITION. In one volume 8vo, illustrated by 350 Woodcuts, price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.HOOD'S WHIMS AND ODDITIES, IN PROSE AND VERSE; with 87 Original Designs. A NEW EDITION. Price 5*s.* cloth.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE'S WORKS.

COLERIDGE'S POEMS. A NEW EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. A NEW EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S AIDS TO REFLECTION. SEVENTH EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S FRIEND. A SERIES OF ESSAYS, TO AID IN THE FORMATION OF FIXED PRINCIPLES IN POLITICS, MORALS, AND RELIGION, WITH LITERARY AMUSEMENTS INTERSPERSED. FOURTH EDITION. In three volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 15s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S ESSAYS ON HIS OWN TIMES. In three volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 18s. cloth.

COLERIDGE ON THE CONSTITUTION OF CHURCH AND STATE. THIRD EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 5s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S LAY SERMONS. THIRD EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 5s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S CONFESSIONS OF AN INQUIRING SPIRIT. THIRD EDITION. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 4s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA; OR, BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF MY LITERARY LIFE AND OPINIONS. SECOND EDITION. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 18s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S NOTES AND LECTURES UPON SHAKSPEARE, AND SOME OF THE OLD POETS AND DRAMATISTS; WITH OTHER LITERARY REMAINS. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S NOTES ON ENGLISH DIVINES. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S NOTES, THEOLOGICAL, POLITICAL, AND MISCELLANEOUS. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

HARTLEY COLERIDGE'S WORKS.

COLERIDGE'S POEMS. With a Memoir, by his Brother. SECOND EDITION. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S ESSAYS AND MARGINALIA.
In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

COLERIDGE'S LIVES OF NORTHERN WORTHIES. A NEW EDITION, with the Corrections of the Author, and the marginal observations of S. T. COLERIDGE. In three volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

WORDSWORTH'S POEMS.

WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS. In six pocket volumes, price 21s. cloth, gilt edges.

WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, medium 8vo, price 20s. cloth.

WORDSWORTH'S PRELUDE ; OR, GROWTH OF A POET'S MIND. AN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL POEM. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

WORDSWORTH'S EXCURSION. A POEM. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 6s. cloth.

SELECT PIECES FROM THE POEMS OF WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. In one volume, illustrated by Woodcuts, price 6s. 6d. cloth, gilt edges.

ROGERS'S POEMS.

ROGERS'S POEMS. In one volume, illustrated by 72 Vignettes, from designs by Turner and Stothard, price 16s. cloth.

ROGERS'S ITALY. In one volume, illustrated by 56 Vignettes, from designs by Turner and Stothard, price 16s. cloth.

ROGERS'S POEMS ; AND ITALY. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, illustrated by numerous Woodcuts, price 10s. cloth.

CAMPBELL'S POEMS.

CAMPBELL'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, illustrated by 20 Vignettes, from designs by Turner, price 16*s.* cloth.

CAMPBELL'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, illustrated by numerous Woodcuts, price 9*s.* cloth.

SHELLEY'S WORKS.

SHELLEY'S POEMS, ESSAYS, AND LETTERS FROM ABROAD. Edited by MRS. SHELLEY. In one volume, medium 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 15*s.* cloth.

SHELLEY'S POETICAL WORKS. Edited by MRS. SHELLEY. In three volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 15*s.* cloth.

SHELLEY'S ESSAYS, LETTERS FROM ABROAD, TRANSLATIONS AND FRAGMENTS. Edited by MRS. SHELLEY. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 9*s.* cloth.

SHELLEY'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, small 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 7*s.* cloth.

KEATS'S POEMS.

KEATS'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, illustrated by 120 Designs, Original and from the Antique, drawn on wood by GEORGE SCHARF, JUN., price 16*s.* cloth.

KEATS'S POETICAL WORKS. In one volume, foolscap 8vo, price 5*s.* cloth.

KEATS'S LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS. Edited by RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES. In two volumes, foolscap 8vo, price 10*s.* cloth.

TENNYSON'S POEMS.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. NINTH EDITION. Price 9*s.* cloth.

TENNYSON'S PRINCESS: A MEDLEY. SIXTH EDITION. Price 5*s.* cloth.

TENNYSON'S ODE ON THE DEATH OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON. SECOND EDITION. Price 1*s.* sewed.

IN MEMORIAM. FIFTH EDITION. Price 6*s.* cloth.

CHAUCER, SPENSER, AND DRYDEN.

CHAUCER'S POETICAL WORKS. With an ESSAY on his LANGUAGE and VERSIFICATION, and an INTRODUCTORY DISCOURSE; together with NOTES and a GLOSSARY. By THOMAS TYRWHITT. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 12*s.* cloth.

SPENSER'S WORKS. With a Selection of NOTES from various commentators; and a GLOSSARIAL INDEX: to which is prefixed some account of the LIFE of Spenser. By the Rev. HENRY JOHN TODD. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 12*s.* cloth.

DRYDEN'S POETICAL WORKS. Containing Original Poems, Tales, and Translations; with Notes by the Rev. JOSEPH WARTON, D.D.; and the Rev. JOHN WARTON, M.A.; and others. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

DRAMATIC LIBRARY.

SHAKSPEARE. With REMARKS on his LIFE and WRITINGS. By THOMAS CAMPBELL. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait, Vignette, and Index, price 16*s.* cloth.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER. With an INTRODUCTION. By GEORGE DARLEY. In two volumes 8vo, with Portraits and Vignettes, price 32*s.* cloth.

BEN JONSON. With a MEMOIR. By WILLIAM GIFFORD. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 16*s.* cloth.

MASSINGER AND FORD. With an INTRODUCTION. By HARTLEY COLERIDGE. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 16*s.* cloth.

WYCHERLEY, CONGREVE, VANBRUGH, AND FARQUHAR. With BIOGRAPHICAL and CRITICAL NOTICES. By LEIGH HUNT. In one volume 8vo, with Portrait and Vignette, price 16*s.* cloth.

SHAKSPEARE.

SHAKSPEARE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. With REMARKS on his LIFE and WRITINGS. By THOMAS CAMPBELL. In six volumes, foolscap 8vo. In the Press.

POETRY.

Pocket Editions.

WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS.

In 6 volumes, price 15*s.* sewed.

ROGERS'S POETICAL WORKS.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

CAMPBELL'S POETICAL WORKS.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

LEIGH HUNT'S POETICAL WORKS.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

KEATS'S POETICAL WORKS.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

SHELLEY'S MINOR POEMS.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

PERCY'S RELIQUES OF ANCIENT ENGLISH POETRY.

In 3 volumes, price 7*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

LAMB'S SPECIMENS OF ENGLISH DRAMATIC POETS.

In 2 volumes, price 5*s.* sewed.

DODD'S BEAUTIES OF SHAKSPEARE.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

Alice Sturgis Hooper
from Aunt Fanny -
Xmas. 1856.

DRAMATIC WORKS.

THE
DRAMATIC WORKS

OF

SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, D.C.L.

ELEVENTH EDITION;

TO WHICH ARE ADDED,

A FEW SONNETS AND VERSES.

LONDON:
EDWARD MOXON, DOVER STREET.
1852.

KL 1931.

43*345

LONDON:
BRADBURY AND EVANS, PRINTERS, WHITEFRIARS.

PREFACE TO THE PRESENT EDITION.

THE Dramas which constitute the principal part of this volume have, for some years, been published only in the form which, although by its cheapness increasing the chance of extended circulation, presents a painful office to eyes worn by study or time. The success of the work in this small size has been such as to preclude any regret for the adoption of a shape to which many poems of higher value have been submitted ; but a demand for an impression in larger type has been so frequently made, that the author feels justified in making the trial, whether, in a form more like that in which the plays first received a share of the public favour, they may retain it for a short time longer. He has taken the opportunity afforded by this edition, to subject them to a revision as severe as he has a right to apply to works which have been so long before the world and have received so much of its indulgence. If he had felt at liberty to deal with them according to the free dictates of his maturest judgment, he would not have confined his revision to the reform of phrases, and the excision of some of the feeblest and most obviously superfluous lines ; but he has thought it due to previous purchasers to leave them, with their manifold imperfections, substantially as they were first published. The principal alteration he has made in the text, consists in the transposition of the original catastrophe of the “Athenian Captive,” from the notes, where it is printed in the small edition, to its proper place, to which he thinks it better adapted than that which, for the purposes of the stage, was substituted for it. The danger of splitting the last act into several scenes, when the representation of the play was contemplated, induced the judicious advice under which the change was made, and which the author gladly embraced ; but still thinking, for the purpose of perusal, his first scheme the most consonant with the general feeling of the piece, he has thus resumed it.

In preparing these dramas for such little further duration as may await them, the author has removed the notices applicable to the temporary purposes of their scenic representation, which have long since lost any interest they ever possessed ; but he has taken leave to retain such portions of the original preface to “Ion” as relate to the history of its composition and its production on the stage, in justice to powers which rendered it vital, and also the passages which, supplying the place of its dedication, comprise a feeble tribute to the memory of his old master, Dr. Valpy, to whom, when printed for private circulation, the drama was inscribed. These he has brought together in the appendix;—being unwilling in advanced life, to sever his efforts from the protection of that learning and excellence which first directed and cheered them. To the sonnets and verses which were included in former editions, he has added a few more, which names and circumstances may invest with an interest independent of that intrinsic merit to which they have slender claim.

London, 1852.

CONTENTS.

	Page
PREFACE TO ION	3
ION: A TRAGEDY	17
DEDICATION OF THE ATHENIAN CAPTIVE TO LORD DENMAN	129
THE ATHENIAN CAPTIVE: A TRAGEDY	131
DEDICATION OF GLENCOE TO LORD JEFFREY	224
PREFACE TO GLENCOE	225
GLENCOE: A TRAGEDY	231
MINOR POEMS:—
SONNETS—
I. EVENING SERVICE AT READING SCHOOL	333
II. THE FORBURY AT READING	334
III. ON HEARING THE SHOUTS OF THE PEOPLE AT THE READING ELECTION, 1826, AT A DISTANCE	335
IV. VIEW OF THE VALLEY OF READING FROM TILEHURST, AT THE CLOSE OF THE SAME ELECTION	336
V. TO THE THAMES AT WESTMINSTER	337
VI. TO THE SAME RIVER	338
VII. TO MR. MACREADY, ON HIS REPRESENTATION OF WERNER	339
VIII. FAME THE SYMBOL AND PROOF OF IMMORTALITY	340

	Page
IX. TO MR. MACREADY, ON THE BIRTH OF HIS FIRST CHILD	341
X. TO CHARLES DICKENS, ON "OLIVER TWIST"	342
XI. TO MISS ADELAIDE KEMBLE, RETIRING FROM THE STAGE	343
XII. ON THE RECEPTION OF WORDSWORTH AT OXFORD	344
XIII. THE MEMORY OF THE POETS	345
XIV. ETON COLLEGE, SURVEYED AFTER LEAVING A SON AT SCHOOL FOR THE FIRST TIME	346
XV. TO LORD DENMAN, RESIGNING THE OFFICE OF LORD CHIEF JUSTICE	347
XVI. TO A LADY VISITING CHAMOUNI, FROM GENEVA	348
XVII. THE WESTMINSTER PLAY	349
XVIII. ON LOUGH'S STATUE OF LADY MACBETH	350
XIX. RECOLLECTION OF THE LATE SIR M. A. SHEE, PRESIDING FOR THE LAST TIME AT THE FESTIVAL OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY	351
XX. TO ROBERT BROWNING, SUGGESTED BY A SUNSET OF UNUSUAL BEAUTY	352
 —
ALUM BAY	353
VERSES, MEMORIAL OF A CHILD NAMED AFTER CHARLES LAMB	357
 APPENDIX :—
NOTICE OF THE LATE DR. VALPY	363

ION;

A TRAGEDY, IN FIVE ACTS.

FIRST ACTED AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, 26TH MAY, 1836.

PREFACE TO ION.

THIS tragedy was first printed for private circulation in April, 1835. The following extracts from the preface with which it was then accompanied, disclose the little history of its composition, and the feeling with which it was originally committed to the press.

“ The title of this Drama is borrowed from the Tragedy of Euripides, which gave the first hint of the situation in which its hero is introduced—that of a foundling youth educated in a temple, and assisting in its services ; but otherwise there is no resemblance between this imperfect sketch and that exquisite picture. It has been written, not indeed without a view to an ideal stage, which should never be absent from the mind of the humblest aspirant to dramatic composition, but without any hope of rendering it worthy to be acted. If it were regarded as a drama composed for actual representation, I am well aware that not in ‘ matter of form ’ only, but in ‘ matter of substance,’ it would be found wanting. The idea of the principal character,—that of a nature essentially pure and disinterested, deriving its strength entirely from goodness and thought, not overcoming evil by the force of will, but escaping it by an insensibility to its approach,—vividly conscious of existence and its pleasures, yet ready to lay them down at the call of duty,—is scarcely capable of being rendered sufficiently striking in itself, or of being subjected to such agitations, as tragedy requires in the fortunes of its heroes. It was further necessary, in order to involve such a character in circumstances which might excite terror or grief or joy, to introduce other machinery than that of passions working naturally within, or events arising from ordinary and probable motives without ; as its own elements would not supply the contests of tragic emotion, nor would its sufferings, however accumulated, present a varied or impressive picture. Recourse has therefore been had, not only to the old Grecian notion of Destiny, apart from all moral agencies, and to a prophecy indicating its purport, in reference to the individuals involved in its chain, but to the idea of fascination, as an engine by which Fate may work its purposes on the innocent mind, and force it into terrible action most uncongenial to itself, but necessary to the issue. Either perhaps of these aids might have been permitted, if used in accordance with the entire spirit of the piece ; but the employment of both could not be justified in a drama intended for visual presentation, in which a certain verisimilitude is essential to the faith of the spectator. Whether any groups, surrounded with the associations of the Greek Mythology, and subjected to the capricious laws of Greek superstition, could be endowed by genius itself with such present life as to awaken the sympathies of an English audience, may well be doubted ; but it cannot be questioned, that except by sustaining a stern unity of purpose, and breathing an atmosphere of Grecian sentiment over the whole, so as to render the picture national and coherent in all its traits, the effect must be unsatisfactory and unreal. Conscious of my inability to produce a work thus justified to the imagination by its own completeness and power, I have not attempted it ; but have sought, out of mere weakness, for 'Fate and metaphysical aid,' to 'crown withal' the ordinary persons of a romantic play. I have, therefore, asked too much for a spectator to grant: but the case is different with the reader who does not seek the powerful excitements of the theatre, nor is bound to a continuous attention; and who, for the sake of scattered sentiments or expressions which may please him, may, at least, by a latitude of friendly allowance, forgive the incongruities of the machinery by which the story is conducted. This drama may be described as the phantasm of a tragedy,—not a thing of substance mortised into the living rock of humanity,—and therefore incapable of exciting that interest which grows out of human feeling, or of holding that permanent place in the memory which truth only can retain.

"There are few perhaps among those who have written for the press, predominant as that majority now is over the minority of mere readers, who have not, at some season of their lives, contemplated the achievement of a tragedy. The narrow and well-defined limits by which the action of tragedy is circumscribed—the various affections which may live and wrestle, and suffer within those palpable boundaries—its appeal to the sources of grief common to humanity on the one hand, and to the most majestic shapings of the imagination on the other, softening and subduing the heart to raise and to enoble it,—and perhaps, more than all, the vivid presentment of the forms in which the strengths and weaknesses of our nature are embodied, its calamities dignified, and its high destiny vindicated, even in the mortal struggle by which for a season it is vanquished,—may well impress every mind, reaching, however feebly, towards the creative, with a fond desire to imitate the great masters of its 'so potent art.' This desire has a powerful ally in the exuberant spirits of youth, when the mind, unchilled by the realities of life, searches for novelty in those forms of sorrow, from which it afterwards may turn for relief to the flickerings of mirth, and to brief snatches of social pleasure. Perhaps ‘gorgeous tragedy’ left a deeper impression when she passed ‘sweeping by’ my intellectual vision, than would have been otherwise received by a mind unapt for so high a correspondence, by reason of the accident that the glimpse was stolen. Denied by the conscientious scruples of friends an early acquaintance with plays, I had derived from Mrs. More’s ‘Sacred Dramas’ my first sense of that peculiar enjoyment which the idea of dramatic action, however imperfectly conveyed, gives; and, stiff and cumbrous as they now seem, I owe to their author that debt of gratitude, which others may perhaps share with me, who have first looked on the world of literature through the net-work of sincere but exclusive opinions. These gave, however, but dim limits of the greatness which was behind;—I looked into the domain of tragedy as into a mountain region covered with mist and cloud;—and incapable of appreciating the deep humanities of Shakspeare, ‘rested and expatiated’ in the brocaded grandeurs of Dryden, Rowe, and Addison. To describe the delight with which, for the first time, I saw the curtain of Covent Garden Theatre raised for the representation of Cato, would be idle,—or how it was sustained during the noble performance which followed, when the visions of Roman constancy and classic grace, which had haunted the mind through all its schoolboy years (then drawing to a close), seemed bodied forth in palpable form, when the poor common-places of an artificial diction flowed ‘mended from the tongue’ of the actor, and the thoughtful words trembling on his lips suggested at once the feeling of earthly weakness and of immortal hope,—and when the old stoic, in his rigid grandeur was reconciled to the human heart by the struggle of paternal love, and became ‘passioned as ourselves.’

without losing any portion of that statue-like dignity which made him the representative of a world of heroic dreamings.

"After this glimpse of the acted drama, I was long haunted by the idle wish to write a tragedy; and many hours did I happily, but vainly, spend in sober contemplations of its theme. I tried to wreath several romantic and impossible stories, which I fashioned in my evening walks into acts, and began to write a scene; but however pleased I might be with the outline of these fantasies, I was too much disgusted with the alternate baldness and fustian of the blank verse, which I produced in the attempt to execute them, to proceed. At this time also just as the laborious avocations of my life were commencing, my taste and feeling, as applied to poetry, underwent an entire change consequent on my becoming acquainted with the poetry of Wordsworth. That power which, slighted and scoffed at as it was then, has since exerted a purifying influence on the literature of this country, such as no other individual power has ever wrought; which has not only given to the material universe 'a speech and a language' before unheard, but has opened new sources of enjoyment even in the works of the greatest poets of past days, and imparted a new sense by which we may relish them;—which, while on the one hand it has dissipated the sickly fascinations of gaudy phraseology, has, on the other, cast around the lowliest conditions a new and exquisite light, and traced out the links of good by which all human things are bound together, and clothed our earthly life in the solemnities which belong to its origin and its destiny—humbled the pride of my swelling conceits, and taught me to look on the mighty works of genius, not with the presumption of an imitator, but with the veneration of a child. The love of contemplative poetry, thus inspired, led me, in such leisure as I could attain, rather to ponder over the resources of the profoundest emotions, or to regard them as associated with the majestic forms of the universe, than to follow them into their violent conflicts and mournful catastrophes; and although I never ceased to regard the acted drama as the most delightful of recreations, I sought no longer to work out a frigid imitation of writers, whom alone I could hope to copy, and whose enchantments were dissipated by more genial magic.

" But the tragic drama was about to revive amongst us, and I was not insensible to its progress. Although the tragedies of the last twelve years are not worthy to be compared with the noblest productions of the great age of our drama, they are with two or three exceptions, far superior to any which had been written in the interval. Since the last skirts of the glory of Shakspeare's age disappeared, we shall search in vain for serious plays of equal power and beauty with Virginius, William Tell, Mirandola, Rienzi, or the Merchant of London; at least, if we except Venice Preserved for the admirable conduct of its story, and Douglas for that romantic tenderness and pathos which have been too little appreciated of late years. It happened to me to be intimately acquainted with all those who contributed to this impulse, and to take an immediate interest in their successes. I also enjoyed the friendship of the delightful artist to whom all have by turns been indebted for the realisation of their noblest conceptions, and was enabled to enjoy with more exquisite relish the home-born affection with which those were endued, and the poetical spirit breathed around them, by finding the same influences shed by Mr. Macready over the sphere of his social and domestic life. It will not be surprising, that, to one thus associated, the old wish to accomplish something in dramatic shape should recur, not accompanied by the hopes of sharing in the scenic triumphs of his friends, but bounded by the possibility of conducting a tale through dialogue to a close, and of making it subserve to the expression of some cherished thoughts. In this state of feeling, some years ago, the scheme of the drama of Ion presented itself to me ; and after brooding over it for some time, I wrote a prose outline of its successive scenes, nearly in the order and to the effect in which they are now completed, and made some progress in an opening scene of which little now remains. The attempt was soon laid aside ; for I found the composition of dramatic blank verse even more difficult now that I had present to me the ease and vividness of my friends, than when I had been contented to emulate the ponderous lines of the dramatists of Garrick's age. Still the idea of my hero occurred to me often ; I found my pleasantest thoughts gathering about him ; and rather more than two years ago I determined to make one essay more. Since that time, such seasons of leisure as I could find have been devoted to the work ; but I had so great distrust of my ability to complete it, that I did not mention my design to any one ; and I cannot charge myself with having permitted it to interfere with any professional or private duty. At the close of last year, I found four acts reduced into form. At this time, the sudden realisation of another youthful dream opened to me the prospect of additional duties, which I knew full well ought to preclude the continuance of those secret flirtations with the Muse in which I had indulged ; and therefore I resolved to make a last effort, and, by completing my drama before those duties should commence, to free myself from the bondage of those threads of fantastical interest which had woven themselves about my mind. I accordingly wrote the fifth act with far more rapidity than any of the previous passages of my play ; and, before I was called upon to share in more momentous business, I had communicated to a few friends the result of my scribblings, and bade adieu to my dramatic endeavours and hopes.

"But it may well be asked, Why, with the sense I have confessed of the feebleness of this poetical sketch, I venture to intrude it on my friends ? My chief reason is, that I am anxious to cast from my own mind the associations which have hung about it during the composition of the poem, and which, while it remained in manuscript susceptible of alteration, I could not certainly hope for ; and, further, to preclude the charge (if it should ever be brought to light hereafter,) that it had occupied leisure which henceforth must be devoted to other studies. I have also a desire to gratify myself by presenting it to my friends, especially to those who are removed to a distance ; because, although as a drama it is unworthy the attention of the world, yet, as containing thoughts which have passed through my own mind, it may be acceptable to those whose conversation I can no longer enjoy. It would be a sufficient reason to myself for printing it, that I shall be able thus to remind Sir Edward Ryan, now, most honourably to himself, and happily for India, Chief Justice of Bengal, and his excellent colleague, Sir Benjamin Malkin, of the delightful hours we have spent together on the Oxford circuit, when life was younger with us, and when some of the topics they will find just touched on in these verses were the themes of our graver walks between Ross and Monmouth, or in the deep winding valleys indenting the table-land above Church Stretton, or haply by moonlight in the Churchyard of Ross.* I take leave to mention these, as far away ; but there are others of my fellow-labourers at home, whose

* Since this reference to the friends of my early professional life was written, Sir Edward Ryan has returned to his country to enjoy the just reward of his labours in the East with the dignity of a Privy Councillor, and the satisfaction of accepting with the honour attendant duties, which his judicial ability and experience peculiarly fit him to discharge. The sympathy and whose conversation have cheered my professional life, who I believe will receive it cordially; and among them I hope my sometime Sessions-leader, who has committed a similar offence, though with more extenuating circumstances, by investing with so much dignity of passion and richness of language the story of the Countess of Essex, will not disdain it."

With these views Ion was sent to the press, and presented to many of my friends. The favour with which it was received by some, whose approbation was most valuable, would have induced me at once to publish it, if I had not been withheld by the suggestion of Mr. Macready, that it would be effective in representation, and by the belief that any interest which might be excited by such an attempt would be lessened by its previous sale. The prospect, that, at least for one evening, the dull tracery of thought, silently and laboriously woven, might burst into light at the torch of sympathy and become palpable to the senses and the affections of a multitude, was too delightful to be resigned, and was ultimately realised by the friend who had opened it. His consent to produce the drama on the night of his benefit secured it against painful repulse; and, although I had still no expectation that even he could endue it with sufficient interest to render it attractive on ordinary occasions, I looked forward to its single representation in the belief that it would be tolerated by an audience disposed to be gratified, and that the impression it might leave, however faint, would be genial and pure. Many of those who had expressed the most favourable opinions of the piece as a composition were even less sanguine than myself as to the probable other, Sir Benjamin Malkin, has been taken from this world in the prime of life, and in the fulness of his powers,—leaving with us the recollection of an intellect as masculine and as refined—of judgment and feeling as discriminating and just—and of social qualities as warm and as equable, as have ever passed, by the mysterious dispensation of Providence, from vigorous exercise into a memory and an example.

event of the evening, and apprehended that it would terminate in their mortification and my own. They did not perceive the possibility of infusing such life into the character of its youthful hero, as would bring the whole fable within the sphere of human sympathies ; reconcile the audience to its machinery ; and render that which seemed only consistent in its dreaminess, at once entire and real. Such was, however, unquestionably the effect of Mr. Macready's performance on that evening, which I believe, —in the judgment of many who cannot be influenced, like the author, by personal regard or individual gratitude,—was one of the most remarkable triumphs of art which have graced the stage within living memory. Although other of his performances were abstractedly greater, none I believe equalled this as an effort of art, estimated with reference to the nature of the materials which he animated, to difficulties which he subdued, and to the pre-conceptions which he charmed away. By the graces of beautiful elocution, he beguiled the audience to receive the drama as belonging to a range of associations which are no longer linked with the living world, but which retain an undying interest of a gentler cast, as a thing which might have been ; and then, by his fearful power of making the fantastic real, he gradually rendered the whole possible—probable—true ! The consequence of this extraordinary power of vivifying the frigid, and familiarising the remote, was to dissipate the fears of my friends ; to render the play an object of attraction during the short remainder of the season ; and to embolden others to attempt the part, and encourage other audiences to approve it, even when the power which first gave it sanction was wanting.

How little it was anticipated that the success of the first performance would justify its repetition, may be gathered from the prologue, which was spoken on that occasion by Mr. Serle, whose earnest and laborious pursuit of excellence as a dramatic poet from early youth I have watched with admiration ; whose successes I have hailed with delight ; and whose association with me in the night's venture is among its happiest recollections.

“ What airy visions on a play's first night
 Have flush'd resplendent here on poet's sight !
 While emulous of glory's stainless wreath,
 He felt 'the future in the instant' breathe ;
 Saw in the soften'd gleam of radiant eyes
 The sacred tear through lids yet tearless rise ;
 Made to each fervid heart the great appeal
 To bear him witness—stamp'd with living seal—
 Of passion into forms of grandeur wrought,
 Or grief by beauty tinged, or raised by thought :
 As cordial hands their liberal boon conferr'd,
 Fame's awful whisper in the distance heard,
 Now shrank from nicest fear, from fancied scorn,—
 Now glow'd with hope for 'age yet unborn.'

“ With no such trembling sense of inward power
 Our author seeks to win his little hour,
 While to your transient glance, he dares unveil
 The feeble outlines of a Grecian tale.
 He boasts no magic skill your souls to draw
 Within the circle of Athenian awe ;
 Where Fate on all things solemn beauty throws,
 And shapes heroic mourn in stern repose ;
 Or to reveal the fane where genius tips
 With love's immortal lustre heavenly lips,
 Where air divine yet breathe round forms so fair,
 That Time enamour'd has been charm'd to spare ;
 Nor his the power which deeds of old imbues
 With present life, and tints with various hues ;
 Casts glowing passion in heroic moulds,
 And makes young feelings burn 'neath ancient folds
 Unlearn'd in arts like these, he seeks to cast
 One faint reflection from the glorious past ;
 A narrow space his fond ambition bounds,—
 His little scenic life this evening rounds !

“ O ! if some image pure a moment play
 O'er the soul's mirror ere it pass away ;
 If from some chance-sown thought a genial nerve
 Should, heart-strung, quicken virtue's cause to serve ;
 Let these slight gifts the breath of kindness claim
 For one night's bubble on the sea of Fame,
 Which tempts no aid, which future praise insures,—
 But lives—glows—trembles—and expires in yours ! ”

The unhoped-for prolongation of the dramatic life of Ion has not altered the opinion of its essential defects which I expressed in the original preface ; but it has been delightful to me, not only because it has gratified an author's passionate desire for the embodiment of his work in theatrical action, but because it has induced a conviction that gentleness and self-sacrifice have charms for the multitude which neither the frigidity of a Greek plot, nor the feebleness of its development, nor manifold errors of composition, can destroy.

T. N. T.

LONDON, 1852.

PERSONS OF THE DRAMA.

ADRASTUS, King of Argos.

MEDON, High Priest of the Temple of Apollo.

CRYTHES, Captain of the Royal Guard.

PHOCION, son of Medon.

CTESIPHON, } noble Argive youths.
CASSANDER, }

ION, a foundling youth.

AGENOR,
CLEON, } sages of Argos.
TIMOCLES, }

IRUS, a boy, slave to Agenor.

CLEMANTHE, daughter of Medon.

HABRA, attendant on Clemanthe.

SCENE—Argos.

THE TIME of the Action is comprised in one day and night, and the following morning.

ION;

A TRAGEDY.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Interior of the Temple of Apollo, which is supposed to be placed on a rocky eminence overlooking the city of Argos. Early morning. The interior lighted by a single lamp suspended from the roof. AGENOR resting against a column;—IRUS seated on a bench at the side of the scene.

AGENOR comes forward and speaks.

AGENOR.

WILL the dawn never visit us ? These hours
Toil heavy with the unresting curse they bear
To do the work of desolating years !
All distant sounds are hush'd ;—the shriek of death
And the survivors' wail are now unheard,
As grief had worn itself to patience. Irus !
I'm loth so soon to break thy scanty rest,
But my heart sickens for the tardy morn ;
Is it not breaking ?—speed and look—yet hold,
Know'st thou the fearful shelf of rock that hangs
Above the encroaching waves, the loftiest point
That stretches eastward ?

c

IRUS.

Know it? O full well!

There often have I bless'd the opening day,
 Which thy free kindness gave me leave to waste
 In happy wandering through the forests.

AGENOR.

Well,

Thou art not then afraid to tread it; there
 The earliest streak from the unrisen sun
 Is to be welcomed;—tell me how it gleams,
 In bloody portent or in saffron hope,
 And hasten back to slumber.

IRUS.

I shall hasten:

Believe not that thy summons broke my rest;
 I was not sleeping.

[Exit IRUS.]

AGENOR.

Heaven be with thee, child!
 His grateful mention of delights bestow'd
 On that most piteous state of servile childhood
 By liberal words chance-dropp'd, has touch'd a vein
 Of feeling which I deem'd for ever numb'd,
 And, by a gush of household memories, breaks
 The icy casing of that thick despair
 Which day by day has gather'd o'er my heart,
 While, basely safe, within this column'd circle,
 Uplifted far into the purer air
 And by Apollo's partial love secured,
 I have, in spirit, glided with the plague
 As in foul darkness or in sickliest light
 It wafted death through Argos; and mine ears.

Listening athirst for any human sound,
 Have caught the dismal cry of confused pain,
 Which to this dizzy height the fitful wind
 Has borne from each sad quarter of the vale
 Where life was.

Re-enter IRUS.

Are there signs of day-break ?

IRUS.

None ;

The eastern sky is still unbroken gloom.

AGENOR.

It cannot surely be. Thine eyes are dim
 (No fault of thine) for want of rest, or now
 I look upon them near, with scalding tears.
 Has care alighted on a head so young ?
 What grief hast thou been weeping ?

IRUS.

Pardon me ;

I never thought at such a mournful time
 To plead my humble sorrow in excuse
 Of feebly-render'd service : but my brother—
 Thou mayst have noted him,—a sturdy lad,
 With eye so merry and with foot so light
 That none could chide his wildest moods—fell sick
 But yesterday, and died in my weak arms
 Ere I could seek for stouter aid : I hoped
 That I had taught my grief to veil its signs
 From thy observant care ; but when I stood
 Upon the well-known terrace where we loved,
 Arm link'd in arm, to watch the gleaming sails—
 His favourite pastime, for he burn'd to share

A seaman's hardy lot,—my tears would flow,
 And I forgot to dry them. But I see
 Cleon is passing yonder; let me call him;
 For it must cheer thy heart to speak with him.

AGENOR.

Call him, good youth, and then go in to sleep,
 Or, if thou wilt, to weep.

[Exit IRUS.

I envy thee
 The privilege, but Jupiter forefend
 That I should rob thee of it!

Enter CLEON.

CLEON.

Hail, Agenor!

Dark as our lot remains, 'tis comfort yet
 To find thy age unstricken.

AGENOR.

Rather mourn
 That I am destined still to linger here
 In strange unnatural strength, while death is round me.
 I chide these sinews that are framed so tough
 Grief cannot palsy them; I chide the air
 Which round this citadel of nature breathes
 With sweetness not of this world; I would share
 The common grave of my dear countrymen,
 And sink to rest while all familiar things,
 Old custom has endear'd are failing with me,
 Rather than shiver on in life behind them:
 Nor should these walls detain me from the paths
 Where death may be embraced, but that my word,
 In a rash moment plighted to our host,

Forbids me to depart without his licence,
Which firmly he refuses.

CLEON.

Do not chide me

If I rejoice to find the generous priest
Strives, with Apollo's blessing, to preserve
The treasure of thy wisdom ;—nay, he trusts not
To promises alone ; his gates are barr'd
Against thy egress :—none, indeed, may pass them
Save the youth Ion, to whose earnest prayer
His foster-father grants reluctant leave
To visit the sad city at his will :
And freely does he use the dangerous boon,
Which, in my thought, the love that cherish'd him,
Since he was found within the sacred grove,
Smiling amidst the storm, a most rare infant,
Should have had sternness to deny.

AGENOR.

What, Ion

The only inmate of this fane allow'd
To seek the mournful scenes where death is busy !—
Ion our sometime darling, whom we prized
As a stray gift, by bounteous Heaven dismiss'd
From some bright sphere which sorrow may not cloud
To make the happy happier ! Is he sent
To grapple with the miseries of this time,
Whose nature such ethereal aspect wears
As it would perish at the touch of wrong ?
By no internal contest is he train'd
For such hard duty ; no emotions rude
Has his clear spirit vanquish'd ;—Love, the germ

Of his mild nature, has spread graces forth,
 Expanding with its progress, as the store
 Of rainbow colour which the seed conceals
 Sheds out its tints from its dim treasury,
 To flush and circle in the flower. No tear
 Has fill'd his eye save that of thoughtful joy
 When, in the evening stilness, lovely things
 Press'd on his soul too busily; his voice,
 If, in the earnestness of childish sports,
 Raised to the tone of anger, check'd its force,
 As if it fear'd to break its being's law,
 And falter'd into music; when the forms
 Of guilty passion have been made to live
 In pictured speech, and others have wax'd loud
 In righteous indignation, he has heard
 With sceptic smile, or from some slender vein
 Of goodness, which surrounding gloom conceal'd,
 Struck sunlight o'er it: so his life has flow'd
 From its mysterious urn a sacred stream,
 In whose calm depth the beautiful and pure
 Alone are mirror'd; which, though shapes of ill
 May hover round its surface, glides in light,
 And takes no shadow from them.

CLEON.

Yet, methinks,
 Thou hast not lately met him, or a change
 Pass'd strangely on him had not miss'd thy wonder.
 His form appears dilated; in those eyes
 Where pleasure danced, a thoughtful sadness dwells;
 Stern purpose knits the forehead, which till now
 Knew not the passing wrinkle of a care:
 Those limbs which in their heedless motion own'd

A stripling's playful happiness, are strung
As if the iron hardships of the camp
Had given them sturdy nurture ; and his step,
Its airiness of yesterday forgotten,
Awakes the echoes of these desolate courts,
As if a hero of the ancient mould
Paced them in armour.

AGENOR.

Hope is in thy tale.

This is no freak of nature's wayward course,
But work of pitying Heaven ; for not in vain
The gods have pour'd into that guileless heart
The strengths that nerve the hero ;—they are ours.

CLEON.

How can he aid us ? Can he stay the pulse
Of ebbing life,—arrest the infected winds,
Or smite the hungry spectre of the grave ?

AGENOR.

And dost thou think these breezes are our foes,—
The innocent airs that used to dance around us,
As if they felt the blessings they convey'd,
Or that the death they bear is casual ? No !
'Tis human guilt that blackens in the cloud,
Flashes athwart its mass in jagged fire,
Whirls in the hurricane, pollutes the air,
Turns all the joyous melodies of earth
To murmurings of doom. There is a foe
Who in the glorious summit of the state
Draws down the great resentment of the gods,
Whom he defies to strike us ;—yet his power
Partakes that just infirmity which nature

Blends in the empire of her proudest sons—
 That it is cased within a single breast,
 And may be pluck'd thence by a single arm.
 Let but that arm, selected by the gods,
 Do its great office on the tyrant's life,
 And Argos breathes again !

CLEON.

A footstep!—hush!

Thy wishes, falling on a slavish ear,
 Would tempt another outrage : 'tis a friend—
 An honest though a crabbed one—Timocles :
 Something hath ruffled him.—Good day, Timocles !

[TIMOCLES passes in front.

He will not speak to us.

AGENOR.

But he shall speak.

Timocles—nay then, thus I must enforce thee ;

[Crossing him.

Thou wilt not cast from thee a comrade's hand
 That may be cold ere sunset.

TIMOCLES (giving his hand).

Thou mayst school me ;

Thy years and love have licence : but I own not
 A stripling's mastery ; is't fit, Agenor ?

AGENOR.

Nay, thou must tell thy wrong ; whate'er it prove,
 I hail thy anger as a hopeful sign,
 For it revives the thought of household days,
 When the small bickerings of friends had space
 To fret, and death was not for ever nigh
 To frown upon estrangement. What has moved thee ?

TIMOCLES.

I blush to tell it. Weary of the night
And of my life, I sought the western portal :
It open'd, when ascending from the stair
That through the rock winds spiral from the town,
Ion, the foundling cherish'd by the priest,
Stood in the entrance : with such mild command
As he has often smilingly obey'd,
I bade him stand aside and let me pass ;
When—wouldst thou think it ?—in determined speech
He gave me counsel to return ; I press'd
Impatient onward : he, with honied phrase
His daring act excusing, grasp'd my arm
With strength resistless ; led me from the gate ;
Replaced its ponderous bars ; and, with a look
As modest as he wore in childhood, left me.

AGENOR.

And thou wilt thank him for it soon ; he comes—
Now hold thy angry purpose if thou canst !

Enter Ion.

ION.

I seek thee, good Timocles, to implore
Again thy pardon. I am young in trust,
And fear lest, in the earnestness of love,
I stay'd thy course too rudely. Thou hast borne
My childish folly often,—do not frown
If I have ventured with unmanner'd zeal
To guard the ripe experience of years
From one rash moment's danger.

TIMOCLES.

Leave thy care.

If I am weary of the flutterer life,
Is mortal bidding thus to cage it in ?

ION.

And art thou tired of being ? Has the grave
No terrors for thee ? Hast thou sunder'd quite
Those thousand meshes which old custom weaves
To bind us earthward, and gay fancy films
With airy lustre various ? Hast subdued
Those cleavings of the spirit to its prison,
Those nice regards, dear habits, pensive memories,
That change the valour of the thoughtful breast
To brave dissimulation of its fears ?
Is hope quench'd in thy bosom ? Thou art free,
And in the simple dignity of man
Standest apart untempted :—do not lose
The great occasion thou hast pluck'd from misery,
Nor play the spendthrift with a great despair,
But use it nobly !

TIMOCLES.

What, to strike ? to slay ?

ION.

No !—not unless the audible voice of Heaven
Call thee to that dire office ; but to shed
On ears abused by falsehood, truths of power
In words immortal,—not such words as flash
From the fierce demagogue's unthinking rage,
To madden for a moment and expire,—
Nor such as the rapt orator imbues
With warmth of facile sympathy, and moulds

To mirrors radiant with fair images,
 To grace the noble fervour of an hour ;—
 But words which bear the spirits of great deeds
 Wing'd for the future ; which the dying breath
 Of freedom's martyr shapes as it exhales,
 And to the most enduring forms of earth
 Commits—to linger in the craggy shade
 Of the deep valley, 'neath the eagle's home,
 Or in the sea-cave where the tempest sleeps,
 Till some heroic leader bid them wake
 To thrill the world with echoes !—But I talk
 Of things above my grasp, which strangely press
 Upon my soul, and tempt me to forget
 The duties of my youth ;—pray you forgive me.

TIMOCLES.

Have I not said so ?

AGENOR.

Welcome to the morn !

The eastern gates unfold, the Priest approaches ;

[As AGENOR speaks, the great gates at the back of the scene open ; the sea is discovered far beneath,—the dawn breaking over it ; MEDON, the Priest, enters attended.]

And lo ! the sun is struggling with the gloom,
 Whose masses fill the eastern sky, and tints
 Its edges with dull red ;—but he will triumph ;
 Bless'd be the omen !

MEDON.

God of light and joy,
 Once more refresh us with thy healing beams !
 If I may trace thy language in the clouds
 That wait upon thy rising, help is nigh—
 But help achieved in blood.

ION.

Say'st thou in blood ?

MEDON.

Yes, Ion !—why, he sickens at the word,
 Spite of his new-born strength ;—the sights of woe
 That he will seek have shed their paleness on him.
 Has this night's walk shown more than common sorrow ?

ION.

I pass'd the palace where the frantic king
 Yet holds his crimson revel, whence the roar
 Of desperate mirth came mingling with the sigh
 Of sturdy life just conquer'd, and the gleam
 Of festal lamps 'mid spectral columns hung
 Flaunting o'er shapes of anguish made them ghastlier.
 How can I cease to tremble for the sad ones
 He mocks—and him the wretchedest of all ?

TIMOCLES.

And canst thou pity him ? Dost thou discern,
 Amidst his impious darings, plea for him ?

ION.

Is he not childless, friendless, and a king ?
 He's human ; and some pulse of good must live
 Within his nature—have ye tried to wake it ?

MEDON.

Yes ; I believe he felt our sufferings once ;
 When, at my strong entreaty, he despatch'd
 Phocion my son to Delphos, there to seek
 Our cause of sorrow ; but, as time dragg'd on Without his messenger's return, he grew
 Impatient of all counsel,—to his palace

In awful mood retiring, wildly call'd
The reckless of his court to share his stores
And end all with him. When we dared disturb
His dreadful feastings with a humble prayer
That he would meet us, the poor slave, who bore
The message, flew back smarting from the scourge,
And mutter'd a decree that he who next
Unbidden met the tyrant's glance should die.

AGENOR.

I am prepared to brave it.

CLEON.

So am I.

TIMOCLES.

And I—

ION.

O Sages, do not think my prayer
Bespeaks unseemly forwardness—send me !
The coarsest reed that trembles in the marsh,
If Heaven select it for its instrument,
May shed celestial music on the breeze
As clearly as the pipe whose virgin gold
Befits the lip of Phœbus ;—ye are wise ;
And needed by your country ; ye are fathers ;
I am a lone stray thing, whose little life
By strangers' bounty cherish'd, like a wave
That from the summer's sea a wanton breeze
Lifts for a moment's sparkle, will subside
Light as it rose, nor leave a sigh in breaking.

MEDON.

Ion, no sigh !

ION.

Forgive me if I seem'd
 To doubt that thou wilt mourn me if I fall ;
 Nor would I tax thy love with such a fear,
 But that high promptings, which could never rise
 Spontaneous in my nature, bid me plead
 Thus boldly for the mission.

MEDON.

My brave boy !
 It shall be as thou wilt. I see thou art call'd
 To this great peril, and I will not stay thee.
 When wilt thou be prepared to seek it ?

ION.

Now.

Only before I go, thus, on my knee,
 Let me in one word thank thee for a life
 Made by thy love one cloudless holiday ;
 And O, my more than father, let me look
 Up to thy face as if indeed a father's,
 And give me a son's blessing !

MEDON.

Bless thee, son !
 I should be marble now ; let's part at once.

ION.

If I should not return, bless Phocion for me ;
 And, for Clemanthe—may I speak one word,
 One parting word with my fair playfellow ?

MEDON.

If thou wouldest have it so, thou shalt.

ION.

Farewell then!

Your prayers wait on my steps. The arm of Heaven
 I feel in life or death will be around me. [Exit.

MEDON.

O grant it be in life! Let's to the sacrifice. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Apartment of the Temple.Enter CLEMANTHE, followed by HABRA.

CLEMANTHE.

Is he so changed?

HABRA.

His bearing is so alter'd,
 That, distant, I scarce knew him for himself;
 But, looking in his face, I felt his smile
 Gracious as ever, though its sweetness wore
 Unwonted sorrow in it.

CLEMANTHE.

He will go
 To some high fortune, and forget us all,
 Reclaim'd (be sure of it) by noble parents;
 Me he forgets already; for five days,
 Five melancholy days, I have not seen him.

HABRA.

Thou knowest that he has privilege to range
 The infected city; and, 'tis said he spends
 The hours of needful rest in squalid hovels
 Where death is most forsaken.

CLEMANTHE.

Why is this?

Why should my father, niggard of the lives
Of aged men, be prodigal of youth
So rich in glorious prophecy as his?

HABRA.

He comes to answer for himself. I'll leave you. [Exit.

CLEMANTHE.

Stay! Well my heart may guard its secret best
By its own strength.

Enter ION.

ION.

How fares my pensive sister?

CLEMANTHE.

How should I fare but ill when the pale hand
Draws the black foldings of the eternal curtain
Closer and closer round us—Phocion absent—
And thou, forsaking all within thy home,
Wilt risk thy life with strangers, in whose aid
Even thou canst do but little?

ION.

It is little:

But in these sharp extremities of fortune,
The blessings which the weak and poor can scatter
Have their own season. 'Tis a little thing
To give a cup of water; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drain'd by fever'd lips,
May give a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisite than when nectarean juice
Renews the life of joy in happiest hours.

It is a little thing to speak a phrase
 Of common comfort which by daily use
 Has almost lost its sense; yet on the ear
 Of him who thought to die unmourn'd, 'twill fall
 Like choicest music; fill the glazing eye
 With welcome tears; relax the knotted hand
 To know the bonds of fellowship again;
 And shed on the departing soul a sense,
 More precious than the benison of friends
 About the honour'd death-bed of the rich,
 To him who else were lonely, that another
 Of the same human mould is near and feels.

CLEMANTHE.

O, thou canst never bear these mournful offices!
 So blithe, so merry once! Will not the sight
 Of frenzied agonies unfix thy reason,
 Or the dumb woe congeal thee?

ION.

No, Clemanthe:
 They are the patient sorrows that touch nearest!
 If thou hadst seen the warrior when he writhed
 In the last grapple of his sinewy frame
 With conquering anguish strive to cast a smile
 (And not in vain) upon his fragile wife,
 Waning beside him,—and, his limbs composed,
 The widow of the moment fix her gaze
 Of longing, speechless love upon the babe,
 The only living thing which yet was hers,
 Spreading its arms for its own resting-place,
 Yet, with attenuated hand, wave off
 The unstricken child, and so embraceless die

Stifling the mighty hunger of the heart;
 Thou couldst endure the sight of selfish grief
 In sullenness or frenzy ;—but to-day
 Another lot falls on me.

CLEMANTHE.

Thou wilt leave us !
 I read it plainly in thy altered mien ;
 Is it for ever ?

ION.

That is with the gods !
 I go but to the palace, urged by hope,
 Which from afar hath darted on my soul,
 That to the humble prayer of one like me
 The haughty king may listen.

CLEMANTHE.

To the palace !
 Knowest thou the peril—nay the certain issue
 That waits thee ? Death !—the tyrant has decreed it,
 Confirm'd it with an oath ; and he has power
 To keep that oath ; for, hated as he is,
 The reckless soldiers who partake his riot
 Are swift to do his bidding.

ION.

I know all !
 But Jove who calls me to the work can shield me,
 Or make me strong to suffer.

CLEMANTHE.

Then the sword
 Falls on thy neck ! O gods ! to think that thou,
 Who in the plenitude of youthful life

Art now before me, ere the sun decline,
 Perhaps in one short hour, shall lie cold, cold,
 To speak, smile, bless no more!—Thou shalt not go!

ION.

Thou must not stay me; even thy father's love
 Commends me to my mission.

CLEMANTHE.

Can he do this?
 I shall not bear his presence if thou fallest
 By his consent; so shall I be alone.

ION.

Phocion will soon return, and juster thoughts
 Of thy admiring father close the gap
 Thy old companion left behind him.

CLEMANTHE.

Never!
 What will to me be father, brother, friends,
 When thou art gone—the light of our life quench'd—
 Haunting like spectres of departed joy
 The home where thou wert dearest?

ION.

Thrill me not
 With words that, in their agony, suggest
 A hope too ravishing,—or my head will swim,
 And my heart faint within me.

CLEMANTHE.

Has my speech
 Such blessed power? I will not mourn it then,
 Though it hath told a secret I had borne
 Till death in silence:—how affection grew

To this, I know not ;—day succeeded day,
 Each fraught with the same innocent delights,
 Without one shock to ruffle the disguise
 Of sisterly regard which thinly veil'd it,
 Till thy changed mien reveal'd it to my soul,
 And thy great peril makes me bold to tell it.
 Do not despise it in me !

ION.

With deep joy
 Thus I receive it. Trust me, it is long
 Since I have learn'd to tremble 'midst our pleasures,
 Lest I should break the golden dream around me
 With most ungrateful rashness. I should bless
 The sharp and perilous duty which hath press'd
 A life's deliciousness into these moments,—
 Which here must end. I came to say farewell,
 And the word must be said.

CLEMANTHE.

Thou canst not mean it !
 Have I disclaimed all maiden bashfulness,
 To tell the cherish'd secret of my soul
 To my soul's master, and in rich return
 Obtain'd the clear assurance of his love,
 To hear him speak that miserable word
 I cannot—will not echo ?

ION.

Heaven has call'd me,
 And I have pledged my honour. When thy heart
 Bestow'd its preference on a friendless boy,
 Thou didst not image him a recreant ; nor

Must he prove so, by thy election crown'd.
 Thou hast endow'd me with a right to claim
 Thy help through this our journey, be its course
 Lengthen'd to age, or in an hour to end ;
 And now I ask it !—bid my courage hold,
 And with thy free approval send me forth
 In soul apparell'd for my office !

CLEMANTHE.

Go !

I would not have thee other than thou art,
 Living or dying—and if thou shouldst fall—

ION.

Be sure I shall return.

CLEMANTHE.

If thou shouldst fall,
 I shall be happier as the affianced bride
 Of thy cold ashes, than in proudest fortunes—
 Thine—ever thine—

[She faints in his arms.]

ION (calls).

Habra !—So best to part—

Enter HABRA.

Let her have air; be near her through the day;
 I know thy tenderness—should ill news come
 Of any friend, she will require it all.

[HABRA bears CLEMANTHE out.]

Ye gods, that have enrich'd the life ye claim
 With priceless treasure, strengthen me to yield it !

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Terrace of the Palace.

ADRASTUS, CRYTHES.

ADRASTUS.

The air breathes freshly after our long night
Of glorious revelry. I'll walk awhile.

CRYTHES.

It blows across the town ; dost thou not fear
It bear infection with it ?

ADRASTUS.

Fear ! dost talk
Of fear to me ? I deem'd even thy poor thoughts
Had better scann'd their master. Prithee tell me
In what act, word, or look, since I have borne
Thy converse here, hast thou discern'd such baseness
As makes thee bold to prate to me of fear ?

CRYTHES.

My liege, of human might all know thee fearless ;
But may not heroes shun the elements
When sickness taints them ?

ADRASTUS.

Let them blast me now !—
I stir not ; tremble not ; these massive walls,
Whose date o'erawes tradition, gird the home
Of a great race of kings, along whose line

The eager mind lives aching, through the darkness
 Of ages else unstoried, till its shapes
 Of armèd sovereigns spread to godlike port,
 And, frowning in the uncertain dawn of time,
 Strike awe, as powers that ruled an elder world,
 In mute obedience. I, sad heritor
 Of all their glories, feel our doom is nigh :
 And I will meet it as befits their fame :
 Nor will I vary my selected path
 The breadth of my sword's edge, nor check a wish,
 If such unkingly yielding might avert it.

CRYTHES.

Thou art ever royal in thy thoughts.

ADRASTUS.

No more—

I would be private.

[Exit CRYTHES.

Grovelling parasite !

Why should I waste these fate-environ'd hours,
 And pledge my great defiance to despair
 With flatterers such as thou !—as if my joys
 Required the pale reflections cast by slaves
 In mirror'd mockery round my throne, or lack'd
 The aid of reptile sympathies to stream
 Through fate's black pageantry ? Let weakness seek Companionship : I'll henceforth feast alone.

Enter a Soldier.

SOLDIER.

My liege, forgive me,—

ADRASTUS.

Well ! Speak out at once
 Thy business, and retire.

SOLDIER.

I have no part
In the presumptuous message that I bear.

ADRASTUS.

Tell it, or go. There is no time to waste
On idle terrors.

SOLDIER.

Thus it is, my lord :

As we were burnishing our arms, a man
Enter'd the court, and when we saw him first
Was tending towards the palace ; in amaze,
We hail'd the rash intruder ; still he walk'd
Unheeding onward, till the western gate
Barr'd further course ; then turning, he besought
Our startled band to herald him to thee,
That he might urge a message which the sages
Had charged him to deliver.

ADRASTUS.

Ah ! the graybeards
Who, 'mid the altars of the gods, conspire
To cast the image of supernal power
From earth its shadow consecrates. What sage
Is so resolved to play the orator
That he would die for't ?

SOLDIER.

He is but a youth,
Yet urged his prayer with a sad constancy
Which could not be denied.

ADRASTUS.

Most bravely plann'd !

Sedition worthy of the reverend host
Of sophist traitors ; brave to scatter fancies
Of discontent 'midst sturdy artizans,
Whose honest sinews they direct unseen,
And make their proxies in the work of peril !—
'Tis fit, when burning to insult their king,
And warn'd the pleasure must be bought with life,
Their valour send a boy to speak their wisdom !
Thou know'st my last decree ; tell this rash youth
The danger he incurs ;—then let him pass,
And own the king more gracious than his masters.

SOLDIER.

We have already told him of the fate
Which waits his daring ; courteously he thank'd us,
But still with solemn accent urged his suit.

ADRASTUS.

Tell him once more, if he persists he dies—
Then, if he will, admit him. Should he hold
His purpose, order Crythes to conduct him,
And see the headsman instantly prepare
To do his office.

[Exit Soldier.

So resolved so young—
'Twere pity he should fall ; yet he must fall,
Or the great sceptre which hath sway'd the fears
Of ages, will become a common staff
For youth to wield, or age to rest upon,
Despoil'd of all its virtues. He must fall,
Else they who prompt the insult will grow bold,
And with their pestilent vauntings through the city
Raise the low fog of murky discontent,
Which now creeps harmless through its marshy birthplace,

To veil my setting glories. He is warn'd;
And if he cross yon threshold he shall die.

Enter CRYTHES and ION.

CRYTHES.

The king!

ADRASTUS.

Stranger, I bid thee welcome;
We are about to tread the same dark passage,
Thou almost on the instant.—Is the sword [To CRYTHES.
Of justice sharpen'd, and the headsman ready?

CRYTHES.

Thou may'st behold them plainly in the court;
Even now the solemn soldiers line the ground,
The steel gleams on the altar, and the slave
Disrobes himself for duty.

ADRASTUS (to ION).

Dost thou see them!

ION.

I do.

ADRASTUS.

By Heaven, he does not change!
If, even now, thou wilt depart and leave
Thy traitorous thoughts unspoken, thou art free.

ION.

I thank thee for thy offer; but I stand
Before thee for the lives of thousands, rich
In all that makes life precious to the brave;
Who perish not alone, but in their fall
Break the far-spreading tendrils that they feed,

And leave them nurtureless. If thou wilt hear me
For them, I am content to speak no more.

ADRASTUS.

Thou hast thy wish then. Crythes! till yon dial
Shall cast its shadow on the approaching hour,
I'll hear this gallant traitor. On the instant,
Come without word, and lead him to his doom.
Now leave us.

CRYTHES.

What, alone?

ADRASTUS.

Yes, slave, alone.

He is no assassin!

[Exit CRYTHES.

Tell me who thou art.

What generous source owns that heroic blood,
Which holds its course thus bravely? What great wars
Have nursed the courage that can look on death,
Certain and speedy death, with placid eye?

ION.

I am a simple youth who never bore
The weight of armour,—one who may not boast
Of noble birth or valour of his own.
Deem not the powers which nerve me thus to speak
In thy great presence, and have made my heart
Upon the verge of bloody death as calm,
As equal in its beatings, as when sleep
Approach'd me nestling from the sportive toils
Of thoughtless childhood, and celestial forms
Began to glimmer through the deepening shadows
Of soft oblivion, to belong to me!—

These are the strengths of Heaven ; to thee they speak,
 Bid thee to hearken to thy people's cry,
 Or warn thee that thy hour must shortly come !

ADRASTUS.

I know it must ; so may'st thou spare thy warnings.
 The envious gods in me have doom'd a race,
 Whose glories stream from the same cloud-girt founts,
 Whence their own dawned upon the infant world ;
 And I shall sit on my ancestral throne
 To meet their vengeance ; but till then I rule
 As I have ever ruled, and thou wilt feel.

ION.

I will not further urge thy safety to thee ;
 It may be, as thou say'st, too late ; nor seek
 To make thee shudder at the gathering curse
 Which shall burst forth in mockery at thy fall ;
 But thou art gifted with a nobler sense—
 I know thou art my sovereign !—sense of pain
 Endured by myriad Argives, in whose souls,
 And in whose fathers' souls, thou and thy fathers
 Have kept their regal state ; whose heartstrings, still
 The living fibres of thy rooted power,
 Quiver with agonies thy crimes have drawn
 From heavenly justice on them.

ADRASTUS.

How ! my crimes ?

ION.

Yes ; 'tis the eternal law, that where guilt is,
 Sorrow shall answer it ; and thou hast not
 A poor man's privilege to bear alone,

Or in the narrow circle of his kinsmen,
 The penalties of evil, for in thine
 A nation's fate lies circled.—King Adrastus !
 Steel'd as thy heart is with the usages
 Of pomp and power, a few short summers since
 Thou wert a child, and canst not be relentless.
 Oh, if maternal love embraced thee then,
 Think of the mothers who with eyes unwet
 Glare o'er their perishing children : hast thou shared
 The glow of a first friendship, which is born
 'Midst the rude sports of boyhood, think of youth
 Smitten amidst its playthings ;—let the spirit
 Of thy own innocent childhood whisper pity !

ADRASTUS.

In every word thou dost but steel my soul.
 My youth was blasted ;—parents, brother, kin—
 All that should people infancy with joy—
 Conspired to poison mine ; despoil'd my life
 Of innocence and hope—all but the sword
 And sceptre—dost thou wonder at me now ?

ION.

I knew that we should pity—

ADRASTUS.

Pity ! dare
 To speak that word again, and torture waits thee !
 I am yet king of Argos. Well, go on—
 Thy time is short, and I am pledged to hear.

ION.

If thou hast ever loved—

ADRASTUS.

Beware ! beware !

ION.

Thou hast ! I see thou hast ! Thou art not marble,
 And thou shalt hear me !—Think upon the time
 When the clear depths of thy yet lucid soul
 Were ruffled with the troublings of strange joy,
 As if some unseen visitant from heaven
 Touch'd the calm lake and wreath'd its images
 In sparkling waves ;—recall the dallying hope
 That on the margin of assurance trembled,
 As loth to lose in certainty too bless'd
 Its happy being ;—taste in thought again
 Of the stolen sweetness of those evening-walks,
 When pansied turf was air to winged feet,
 And circling forests, by ethereal touch
 Enchanted, wore the livery of the sky,
 As if about to melt in golden light
 Shapes of one heavenly vision ; and thy heart,
 Enlarged by its new sympathy with one,
 Grew bountiful to all !

ADRASTUS.

That tone ! that tone !

Whence came it ? from thy lips ? It cannot be—
 The long-hush'd music of the only voice
 That ever spake unbought affection to me,
 And waked my soul to blessing !—O sweet hours
 Of golden joy, ye come ! your glories break
 Through my pavilion'd spirit's sable folds !
 Roll on ! roll on !—Stranger, thou dost enforce me

To speak of things unbreathed by lip of mine
To human ear :—wilt listen ?

ION.

As a child.

ADRASTUS.

Again !—that voice again !—thou hast seen me moved
As never mortal saw me, by a tone
Which some light breeze, enamour'd of the sound,
Hath wafted through the woods, till thy young voice
Caught it to rive and melt me. At my birth
This city, which, expectant of its prince,
Lay hush'd, broke out in clamorous ecstacies ;
Yet, in that moment, while the uplifted cups
Foam'd with the choicest product of the sun,
And welcome thunder'd from a thousand throats,
My doom was seal'd. From the hearth's vacant space,
In the dark chamber where my mother lay,
Faint with the sense of pain-bought happiness,
Came forth, in heart-appalling tone, these words
Of me the nurseling—"Woe unto the babe !
"Against the life which now begins shall life,
"Lighted from thence, be arm'd, and, both soon quench'd,
"End this great line in sorrow!"—Ere I grew
Of years to know myself a thing accurs'd,
A second son was born, to steal the love
Which fate had else scarce rifled : he became
My parents' hope, the darling of the crew
Who lived upon their smiles, and thought it flattery
To trace in every foible of my youth—
A prince's youth!—the workings of the curse ;

My very mother—Jove! I cannot bear
To speak it now—look'd freezingly upon me!

ION.

But thy brother—

ADRASTUS.

Died. Thou hast heard the lie,
The common lie that every peasant tells
Of me his master,—that I slew the boy.
'Tis false! One summer's eve, below a crag
Which, in his wilful mood, he strove to climb,
He lay a mangled corpse: the very slaves,
Whose cruelty had shut him from my heart,
Now coin'd their own injustice into proofs
To brand me as his murderer.

ION.

Did they dare
Accuse thee?

ADRASTUS.

Not in open speech:—they felt
I should have seized the miscreant by the throat,
And crush'd the lie half-spoken with the life
Of the base speaker:—but the tale look'd out
From the stolen gaze of coward eyes, which shrank
When mine have met them; murmur'd through the crowd
That at the sacrifice, or feast, or game,
Stood distant from me; burnt into my soul
When I beheld it in my father's shudder!

ION.

Didst not declare thy innocence?

ADRASTUS.

To whom ?

To parents who could doubt me ? To the ring
 Of grave impostors, or their shallow sons,
 Who should have studied to prevent my wish
 Before it grew to language ; hail'd my choice
 To service as a prize to wrestle for ;
 And whose reluctant courtesy I bore,
 Pale with proud anger, till from lips compress'd
 The blood has started ! To the common herd,
 The vassals of our ancient house, the mass
 Of bones and muscles framed to till the soil
 A few brief years, then rot unnamed beneath it,
 Or, deck'd for slaughter at their master's call,
 To smite and to be smitten, and lie crush'd
 In heaps to swell his glory or his shame ?
 Answer to them ? No ! though my heart had burst,
 As it was nigh to bursting !—To the mountains
 I fled, and on their pinnacles of snow
 Breasted the icy wind, in hope to cool
 My spirit's fever—struggled with the oak
 In search of weariness, and learn'd to rive
 Its stubborn boughs, till limbs once lightly strung
 Might mate in cordage with its infant stems ;
 Or on the sea-beat rock tore off the vest
 Which burnt upon my bosom, and to air
 Headlong committed, clove the water's depth
 Which plummet never sounded ;—but in vain.

ION.

Yet succour came to thee ?

ADRASTUS.

A blessed one !

E

Which the strange magic of thy voice revives,
 And thus unlocks my soul. My rapid steps
 Were in a wood-encircled valley stay'd
 By the bright vision of a maid, whose face
 Most lovely more than loveliness reveal'd
 In touch of patient grief, which dearer seem'd
 Than happiness to spirit sear'd like mine.
 With feeble hands she strove to lay in earth
 The body of her aged sire, whose death
 Left her alone. I aided her sad work,
 And soon two lonely ones by holy rites
 Became one happy being. Days, weeks, months,
 In streamlike unity flow'd silent by us
 In our delightful nest. My father's spies—
 Slaves, whom my nod should have consign'd to stripes
 Or the swift falchion—track'd our sylvan home
 Just as my bosom knew its second joy,
 And, spite of fortune, I embrac'd a son.

ION.

Urged by thy trembling parents to avert
 That dreadful prophecy ?

ADRASTUS.

Fools ! did they deem
 Its worst accomplishment could match the ill
 Which they wrought on me ? It had left unharm'd
 A thousand ecstasies of passion'd years,
 Which, tasted once, live ever, and disdain
 Fate's iron grapple ! Could I now behold
 That son with knife uplifted at my heart,
 A moment ere my life-blood follow'd it,
 I would embrace him with my dying eyes,

And pardon destiny ! While jocund smiles
 Wreathed on the infant's face, as if good spirits
 Suggested pleasant fancies to its soul,
 The ruffians broke upon us ; seized the child ;
 Dash'd through the thicket to the beetling rock
 'Neath which the deep sea eddies ; I stood still
 As stricken into stone : I heard him cry,
 Press'd by the rudeness of the murderer's gripe,
 Severer ill unfearing—then the splash
 Of waters that shall cover him for ever ;
 And could not stir to save him !

ION.

And the mother—

ADRASTUS.

She spake no word, but clasp'd me in her arms,
 And then laid down to die. A lingering gaze
 Of love she fix'd on me—none other loved,
 And so pass'd hence. By Jupiter, her look !
 Her dying patience glimmers in thy face !
 She lives again ! She looks upon me now !
 There's magic in't. Bear with me—I am childish.

*Enter CRYTHES and Guards.ADRASTUS.

Why art thou here ?

CRYTHES.

The dial points the hour.

ADRASTUS.

Dost thou not see that horrid purpose pass'd ?
 Hast thou no heart—no sense ?

CRYTHES.

Scarce half an hour
 Hath flown since the command on which I wait.

ADRASTUS.

Scarce half an hour!—years—years have roll'd since then.
 Begone! remove that pageantry of death—
 It blasts my sight—and hearken! Touch a hair
 Of this brave youth, or look on him as now
 With thy cold headsman's eye, and yonder band
 Shall not expect a fearful show in vain.
 Hence! without a word.

[Exit CRYTHES.]

What wouldst thou have me do ?

ION.

Let thy awaken'd heart speak its own language ;
 Convene thy sages ;—frankly, nobly meet them ;
 Explore with them the pleasure of the gods,
 And, whatsoe'er the sacrifice, perform it.

ADRASTUS.

Well! I will seek their presence in an hour ;
 Go summon them, young hero : hold ! no word
 Of the strange passion thou hast witness'd here.

ION.

Distrust me not.—Propitious gods, I bless you !

[Exit.]

ADRASTUS.

Yet stay—he's gone—his spell is on me yet ;
 What have I promised him ? To meet the men
 Who from my living head would strip the crown,
 And sit in judgment on me ?—I must do it—
 Yet shall my band be ready to o'erawe
 The course of liberal speech, and if it rise
 So as too loudly to offend mine ear,
 Strike the rash brawler dead !—What idle dream

Of long-past days had melted me? It fades—
It vanishes—I am again a king!

SCENE II.—The Interior of the Temple.

Same as ACT I. SCENE I.

CLEMANTHE seated—HABRA attending her.

HABRA.

Look, dearest lady!—the thin smoke aspires
In the calm air, as when in happier times
It show'd the gods propitious: wilt thou seek
Thy chamber, lest thy father and his friends,
Returning, find us hinderers of their council?
She answers not—she hearkens not—with joy
Could I believe her, for the first time sullen!
Still she is rapt.

Enter AGENOR.

O speak to my sweet mistress;
Haply thy voice may rouse her.

AGENOR.

Dear Clemanthe,
Hope dawns in every omen; we shall taste
Old household joys again.

Enter MEDON, CLEON, TIMOCLES, and others.

MEDON.

Clemanthe here!

How sad! how pale!

HABRA.

Her eye is kindling—hush!

CLEON.

Hark ! hear ye not a distant footstep ?

MEDON.

No.

Look round, my fairest child ; thy friends are near thee.

CLEON.

Yes !—now 'tis lost—'tis on that endless stair—
Nearer and more distinct—'tis his—'tis his—
He lives ! he comes !

[CLEMANTHE rises and rushes to the back of the stage, at which ION appears, and returns with her.

Here is your messenger,
Whom Heaven has rescued from the tyrant's rage
Ye sent him forth to brave. Rejoice, old men,
That ye are guiltless of his blood !—why pause ye ?
Why shout ye not his welcome ?

MEDON.

Dearest girl,
This is no scene for thee ; go to thy chamber ;
I'll come to thee ere long. [Exeunt CLEMANTHE and HABRA.

She is o'erwrought
By fear and joy for one whose infant hopes
Were mingled with her own, even as a brother's.

TIMOCLES.

Ion !

How shall we do thee honour ?

ION.

None is due
Save to the gods whose gracious influence sways
The king ye deem'd relentless ;—he consents
To meet ye presently in council :—speed !

This may be virtue's latest rally in him,
In fitful strength, ere it be quench'd for ever !

MEDON.

Haste to your seats ; I will but speak a word
With our brave friend, and follow : though convened
In speed, let our assembly lack no forms
Of due observance, which to furious power
Plead with the silent emphasis of years.

[Exeunt all but MEDON and ION.]

Ion, draw near me ; this eventful day
Hath shown thy nature's graces circled round
With firmness which accomplishes the hero ;—
And it would bring to me but one proud thought—
That virtues which required not culture's aid
Shed their first fragrance 'neath my roof, and there
Found shelter ;—but it also hath reveal'd
What I may not hide from thee, that my child,
My blithe and innocent girl—more fair in soul,
More delicate in fancy than in mould—
Loves thee with other than a sister's love.
I should have cared for this : I vainly deem'd
A fellowship in childhood's thousand joys
And household memories had nurtured friendship
Which might hold peaceful empire in the soul ;
But in that guise the traitor hath stolen in,
And the fair citadel is thine.

ION.

"Tis true.

I did not think the nurseling of thy house
Could thus disturb its holiest inmate's duty
With tale of selfish passion ;—but we met

As playmates who might never meet again,
 And then the hidden truth flash'd forth, and show'd
 To each the image in the other's soul
 In one bright instant.

MEDON.

Be that instant blest !

Enter CTESIPHON.

MEDON.

Art come to chide me to the council ?

CTESIPHON.

No ;

To bring unwonted joy ; thy son approaches.

MEDON.

Thank Heaven ! Hast spoken with him ? Is he well ?

CTESIPHON.

I strove in vain to reach him, for the crowd,
 Roused from the untended couch and dismal hearth
 By the strange visiting of hope, press'd round him ;
 But, by his head erect and fiery glance,
 I know that he is well, and that he bears
 A message which shall shake the tyrant. [Shouts.] See !
 The throng is tending this way—now it parts,
 And yields him to thy arms.

Enter PHOCION.

MEDON.

Welcome, my Phocion—
 Hast brought the answer of the god ?

PHOCION.

I have :

Now let Adrastus tremble !

MEDON.

May we hear it ?

PHOCION.

I am sworn first to utter it to him.

CTESIPHON.

But it is fatal to him !—Say but that !

PHOCION.

Ha, Ctesiphon !—I mark'd thee not before.

How fares thy father ?

ION (to Phocion).

Do not speak of him.

CTESIPHON (overhearing Ion).Not speak of him ! Dost think there is a moment
When common things eclipse the burning thought
Of him and vengeance ?

PHOCION.

Has the tyrant's sword—

CTESIPHON.

No, Phocion ; that were merciful and brave,
Compared to his base deed ; yet will I tell it
To make the flashing of thine eye more deadly,
And edge thy words that they may rive his heartstrings.
The last time that Adrastus dared to face
The sages of the state, although my father,
Yielding to nature's mild decay, had left
All worldly toil and hope, he gather'd strength,

In his old seat, to speak one word of warning.
 Thou know'st how bland with years his wisdom grew,
 And how with language, steep'd in love, he sheathed
 The sharpness of rebuke ; yet, ere his speech
 Was closed, the tyrant started from his throne,
 And with his base hand smote him ; 'twas his death-stroke ;
 The old man totter'd home, and only once
 Raised his head after !

PHOCION.

Thou wert absent ? Yes !

The heartless tyrant lives !

CTESIPHON.

Had I beheld
 That sacrilege, Adrastus had lain dead,
 Or I had been torn piecemeal by his minions.
 But I was far away : when I return'd,
 I found my father on the nearest bench
 Within our door, his thinly silver'd head
 Supported by wan hands, which hid his face
 And would not be withdrawn ;—no groan, no sigh
 Was audible, and we could only learn
 By short convulsive tremblings of his frame
 That life still flicker'd in it—yet at last,
 By some unearthly inspiration roused,
 He dropp'd his wither'd hands, and sat erect
 As in his manhood's glory—the free blood
 Flush'd crimson through his cheeks, his furrow'd brow
 Expanded clear, and his eyes opening full
 Gleam'd with a youthful fire ;—I fell in awe
 Upon my knees before him—still he spake not,
 But slowly raised his arm untrembling ; clench'd

His hand as if it grasp'd an airy knife,
 And struck in air: my hand was joined with his
 In nervous grasp—my lifted eye met his
 In steadfast gaze—my pressure answer'd his—
 We knew at once each other's thought; a smile
 Of the old sweetness play'd upon his lips,
 And life forsook him. Weaponless I flew
 To seek the tyrant, and was driven with scoffs
 From the proud gates which shelter him. He lives—
 And I am here to babble of revenge!

PHOCION.

It comes, my friend—attend me to the king!

ION.

Even while we speak, Adrastus meets his council;
 There let us seek him: should ye find him touch'd
 With penitence, as happily ye may,
 O give allowance to his soften'd nature!

CTESIPHON.

Show grace to him!—Dost dare?—I had forgot,
 Thou dost not know how a son loves a father!

ION.

I know enough to feel for thee; I know
 Thou hast endured the vilest wrong that tyranny
 In its worst frenzy can inflict;—yet think,
 O think! before the irrevocable deed
 Shuts out all thought, how much of power's excess
 Is theirs who raise the idol:—do we groan
 Beneath the personal force of this rash man,
 Who forty summers since hung at the breast

A playful weakling ; whom the heat unnerves ;
 The north wind pierces ; and the hand of death
 Will, in a moment, change to clay as vile
 As that of the scourged slave whose chains it severs ?
 No ! 'tis our weakness gasping for the shows
 Of outward strength that builds up tyranny,
 And makes it look so glorious :—If we shrink
 Faint-hearted from the reckoning of our span
 Of mortal days, we pamper the fond wish
 For long duration by a line of kings :
 If the rich pageantry of thoughts must fade
 All unsubstantial as the regal hues
 Of eve which purpled them, our cunning frailty
 Must clothe a living image with their pomp,
 And wreath a diadem around its brow,
 In which our sunny fantasies may live
 Empearl'd, and gleam, in fatal splendour, far
 On after ages. We must look within
 For that which makes us slaves :—on sympathies
 Which find no kindred objects in the plain
 Of common life—affections that aspire
 In air too thin—and fancy's dewy film
 Floating for rest ; for even such delicate threads,
 Gather'd by Fate's engrossing hand, supply
 The eternal spindle whence she weaves the bond
 Of cable strength in which our nature struggles !

CTESIPHON.

Go talk to others, if thou wilt ;—to me
 All argument, save that of steel, is idle.

MEDON.

No more :—let's seek the council—there, my son,

Tell thy great message nobly ;—and for thee,
Poor orphan'd youth, be sure the gods are just ! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The great Square of the City. ADRASTUS seated on a throne; AGENOR, TIMOCLES, CLEON, and others, seated as Councillors—Soldiers line the stage at a distance.

ADRASTUS.

Upon your summons, Sages, I am here ;
Your king attends to know your pleasure ; speak it

AGENOR.

And canst thou ask ? If the heart dead within thee
Receives no impress of this awful time,
Art thou of sense forsaken ? Are thine ears
So charm'd by strains of slavish minstrelsy,
That the dull groan and frenzy-pointed shriek
Pass them unheard to Heaven ? Or are thine eyes
So conversant with prodigies of grief,
They cease to dazzle at them ? Art thou arm'd
'Gainst wonder, while, in all things, nature turns
To dreadful contraries ;—while youth's full cheek
Is shrivell'd into furrows of sad years,
And 'neath its glossy curls untinged by care
Looks out a keen anatomy ;—while age
Is stung by feverish torture for an hour
Into youth's strength ; while fragile womanhood
Starts into frightful courage, all unlike
The gentle strength its gentle weakness feeds
To make affliction beautiful, and stalks
Abroad, a tearless and unshuddering thing ;—
While childhood, in its orphan'd freedom blithe,

Finds, in its shapes of wretchedness which seem
 Grotesque to its unsadden'd vision, cause
 For dreadful mirth that shortly shall be hush'd
 In never-broken silence ; and while love,
 Immortal through all change, makes ghastly death
 Its idol, and with furious passion digs
 Amid sepulchral images for gauds
 To cheat its fancy with ?—Do sights like these Glare through the realm thou shouldst be parent to,
 And canst thou find the voice to ask “ our pleasure ? ”

ADRASTUS.

Cease, babbler ;—wherefore would you stun my ears
 With vain recital of the griefs I know,
 And cannot heal ?—will treason turn aside
 The shaft of death, or soften nature's ills ?
 I have no skill to heal the sick, nor power
 To sway the elements.

AGENOR.

Thou hast the power
 To cast thyself upon the earth with us
 In penitential shame ; or, if this power
 Has left a heart made weak by luxury
 And hard by pride, thou hast at least the power
 To spare the mockery of thy frantic revels.

ADRASTUS.

I have yet power to punish insult—look
 I use it not, Agenor !—Fate may dash
 My sceptre from me, but shall not command
 My will to hold it with a feebler grasp ;
 Nay, if few hours of empire yet are mine,

They shall be colour'd with a sterner pride,
And peopled with more lustrous joys, than flush'd
In the serene procession of its greatness,
Which look'd perpetual, as the flowing course
Of human things. Have ye beheld a pine
That clasp'd the mountain-summit with a root
As firm as its rough marble, and, apart
From the huge shade of undistinguish'd trees,
Lifted its head, as in delight, to share
The evening glories of the sky, and taste
The wanton dalliance of the heavenly breeze
That no ignoble vapour from the vale
Could mingle with—smit by the flaming marl,
And lighted for destruction? How it stood
One glorious moment, fringed and wreathed with fire
Which show'd the inward graces of its shape,
Uncumber'd now, and midst its topmost boughs,
That young ambition's airy fancies made
Their giddy nest, leap'd sportive;—never clad
By liberal summer in a pomp so rich
As waited on its downfall, while it took
The storm-cloud roll'd behind it for a curtain
To gird its splendours round, and made the blast
Its minister to whirl its flashing shreds
Aloft towards heaven, or to the startled depths
Of forests that afar might share its doom!
So shall the royalty of Argos pass
In festal blaze to darkness! Have ye spoken?

AGENOR.

I speak no more to thee!—Great Jove, look down!

[Shouting without.

ADRASTUS.

What factious brawl is this?—Disperse it, soldiers.

[Shouting renewed—As some of the Soldiers are about to march, PHOCION rushes in, followed by CTESIPHON, ION, and MEDON.

Whence is this insolent intrusion?

PHOCION.

King!

I bear Apollo's answer to thy prayer.

ADRASTUS.

Has not thy travel taught thy knee its duty?

Here we had school'd thee better.

PHOCION.

Kneel to thee!

MEDON.

Patience, my son! Do homage to the king.

PHOCION.

Never!—thou talk'st of schooling—know, Adrastus,
That I have studied in a nobler school
Than the dull haunt of venal sophistry
Or the lewd guard-room; o'er which ancient heaven
Extends its arch for all, and mocks the span
Of palaces and dungeons; where the heart
In its free beatings, 'neath the coarsest vest,
Claims kindred with diviner things than power
Of kings can raise or stifle—in the school
Of mighty nature—where I learn'd to blush
At sight like this, of thousands basely hush'd
Before a man no mightier than themselves,
Save in the absence of that love that softens.

ADRASTUS.

Peace! speak thy message.

PHOCION.

Shall I tell it here ?
 Or shall I seek thy couch at dead of night,
 And breathe it in low whisper ?—As thou wilt.

ADRASTUS.

Here—and this instant !

PHOCION.

Hearken then, Adrastus,
 And hearken, Argives—thus Apollo speaks :—

"Argos ne'er shall find release Till her monarch's race shall cease."

[Reads a scroll.]

ADRASTUS.

"Tis not God's will, but man's sedition speaks :—
 Guards ! tear that lying parchment from his hands,
 And bear him to the palace.

MEDON.

Touch him not,—
 He is Apollo's messenger, whose lips
 Were never stain'd with falsehood.

PHOCION.

Come on, all !

AGENOR.

Surround him, friends ! Die with him !

ADRASTUS.

Soldiers, charge
 Upon these rebels ; hew them down. On, on !

[The soldiers advance and surround the people ; they seize PHOCION.
 ION rushes from the back of the stage, and throws himself between ADRASTUS and PHOCION.

PHOCION (to ADRASTUS).

Yet I defy thee.

F

ION (to Phocion).

Friend ! for sake of all,
 Enrage him not—wait while I speak a word—
 [To Adrastus] My sovereign, I implore thee, do not stain
 This sacred place with blood ; in Heaven's great name
 I do conjure thee—and in hers, whose shade
 Is mourning for thee now !

ADRASTUS.

Release the stripling—
 He is not worth my anger. To the palace !

ION.

Nay, hold an instant !—let my speech have power
 From Heaven to move thee further : thou hast heard
 The sentence of the god, and thy heart owns it ;
 If thou wilt cast aside this cumbrous pomp,
 And in seclusion purify thy soul
 Long fever'd and sophisticate, the gods
 May give thee space for penitential thoughts ;
 If not—as surely as thou standest here,
 Wilt thou lie stiff and weltering in thy blood—
 The vision presses on me now.

ADRASTUS.

Art mad ?
 Resign my state ? Sue to the gods for life,
 The common life which every slave endures,
 And meanly clings to ? No ; within yon walls
 I shall resume the banquet, never more
 Broken by man's intrusion. Councillors,
 Farewell !—go mutter treason till ye perish !

[Exeunt ADRASTUS, CRYTHES, and Soldiers.]

ION (who stands apart leaning on a pedestal).
 'Tis seal'd !

MEDON.

Let us withdraw, and strive
 By sacrifice to pacify the gods !

[MEDON, AGENOR, and Councillors, retire : they leave CTESIPHON,
 PHOCION, and ION. ION still stands apart as rapt in meditation.

CTESIPHON.

'Tis well : the measure of his guilt is fill'd.
 Where shall we meet at sunset ?

PHOCION.

In the grove,
 Which with its matted shade imbrowns the vale,
 Between those buttresses of rock that guard
 The sacred mountain on its western side,
 Stands a rude altar—overgrown with moss,
 And stain'd with drippings of a million showers,
 So old, that no tradition names the power
 That hallow'd it,—which we will consecrate
 Anew to freedom and to justice.

CTESIPHON.

Thither
 Will I bring friends to meet thee. Shall we speak
 To yon rapt youth ? [Pointing to ION.

PHOCION.

His nature is too gentle.
 At sunset we will meet.—With arms ?

CTESIPHON.

A knife—
 One sacrificial knife will serve.

PHOCION.

At sunset!

[Exeunt CTESIPHON and PHOCION severally. ION comes forward.]

ION.

O wretched King, thy words have seal'd thy doom !
 Why should I shiver at it, when no way,
 Save this, remains to break the ponderous cloud
 That hangs above my wretched country ?—death—
 A single death, the common lot of all,
 Which it will not be mine to look upon,—
 And yet its ghastly shape dilates before me ;
 I cannot shut it out ; my thoughts grow rigid,
 And as one grim and prostrate figure haunts them,
 My sinews stiffen like it. Courage, Ion !
 No spectral form is here ; all outward things
 Wear their own old familiar looks : no dye
 Pollutes them. Yet the air has scent of blood,
 And now it eddies with a hurtling sound,
 As if some weapon swiftly clove it. No—
 The falchion's course is silent as the grave
 That yawns before its victim. Gracious powers,
 If the great duty of my life be near,
 Grant it may be to suffer, not to strike !

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Terrace of the Temple.

CLEMANTHE, ION.

CLEMANTHE.

Nay, I must chide this sorrow from thy brow,
 Or 'twill rebuke my happiness ;—I know
 Too well the miseries that hem us round ;
 And yet the inward sunshine of my soul,
 Unclouded by their melancholy shadows,
 Bathes in its deep tranquillity one image—
 One only image, which no outward storm
 Can ever ruffle. Let me wean thee, then,
 From this vain pondering o'er the general grief,
 Which makes my joy look guilty.

ION.

No, my fair one,
 The gloom that wrongs thy love is unredeem'd
 By generous sense of others' woe : too sure
 It rises from dark presages within,
 And will not leave me.

CLEMANTHE.

Then it is most groundless !
 Hast thou not won the blessings of the perishing
 By constancy, the fame of which shall live
 While a heart beats in Argos ?—hast thou not

Upon one agitated bosom pour'd
 Delicious peace? and can thy generous nature,
 While it thus sheds felicity around it,
 Remain itself unbless'd?

ION.

I strove awhile

To think the assured possession of thy love
 With too divine a burthen weigh'd my heart
 And press'd my spirits down;—but 'tis not so;
 Nor will I with false tenderness beguile thee,
 By feigning that my sadness has a cause
 So exquisite. Clemanthe! thou wilt find me
 A sad companion;—I who knew not life,
 Save as the sportive breath of happiness,
 Now feel my minutes teeming, as they rise,
 With grave experiences; I dream no more
 Of azure realms where restless beauty sports
 In myriad shapes fantastic; dismal vaults
 In black succession open, till the gloom
 Afar is broken by a streak of fire
 That shapes my name—the fearful wind that moans
 Before the storm articulates its sound;
 And as I pass'd, but now, the solemn range
 Of Argive monarchs, that in sculptured mockery
 Of present empire sit, their eyes of stone
 Bent on me instinct with a frightful life
 That drew me into fellowship with them,
 As conscious marble; while their ponderous lips—
 Fit organs of eternity—unclosed,
 And, as I live to tell thee, murmur'd “Hail!
 Hail! ION THE DEVOTED!”

CLEMANTHE.

These are fancies,
Which thy soul, late expanded with great purpose,
Shapes, as it quivers to its natural circle
In which its joys should lurk, as in the bud
The cells of fragrance cluster. Cast them from thee,
And strive to be thyself.

ION.

I will do so!

I'll gaze upon thy loveliness, and drink
Its quiet in ;—how beautiful thou art !—
My pulse throbs now as it was wont ;—a being,
Which owns so fair a glass to mirror it,
Cannot show darkly.

CLEMANTHE.

We shall soon be blessed ;
My father will rejoice to own our love,
And Argos brighten ;—for her tyrant's course
Must have a speedy end.

ION.

It must! It must!

CLEMANTHE.

Yes ; for no empty talk of public wrongs
Assails him now ; keen hatred and revenge
Are roused to crush him.

ION.

Not by such base agents
May the august lustration be achieved :
He who shall cleanse his country from the guilt
For which Heaven smites it, should be pure of soul,

Guileless as infancy, and undisturb'd
 By personal anger as thy father is,
 When, with unswerving hand and piteous eye,
 He stops the brief life of the innocent lamb
 Bound with white fillets to the altar ;—so
 Enwreathed by fate the royal victim heaves,
 And soon his breast shall shrink beneath the knife
 Of the selected slayer !

CLEMANTHE.

"Tis thyself
 Whom thy strange language pictures—Ion ! thou—

ION.

She has said it ! Her pure lips have spoken out
 What all things intimate ;—didst thou not mark.
Me for the office of avenger—me ?

CLEMANTHE.

No ;—save from the wild picture that thy fancy—
 Thy o'erwrought fancy drew ; I thought it look'd
 Too like thee, and I shudder'd.

ION.

So do I !

And yet I sometimes wish I shudder'd more,
 For the dire thought has grown familiar with me—
 Could I escape it !

CLEMANTHE.

"Twill away in sleep.

ION.

No, no ! I dare not sleep—for well I know
 That then the knife will gleam, the blood will gush,

The form will stiffen!—I will walk awhile
 In the soft evening light, and try to chase
 These fearful images away.

CLEMANTHE.

Let me

Go with thee. O, how often hand in hand
 In such a lovely night have we roam'd westward
 Aimless and blessed, when we were no more
 Than playmates:—surely we are not grown stranger
 Since yesterday!

ION.

No, dearest, not to-night:

The plague yet rages fiercely in the vale,
 And I am placed in grave commission here
 To watch the gates:—indeed thou must not pass;
 I will be merrier when we meet again,—
 Trust me my love, I will; farewell!

[Exit Ion.

CLEMANTHE.

Farewell then!

How fearful disproportion shows in one
 Whose life hath been all harmony! He bends
 Towards that thick covert where in blessed hour
 My father found him, which has ever been
 His chosen place of musing. Shall I follow?
 Am I already grown a selfish mistress,
 To watch his solitude with jealous eye,
 And claim him all?—That let me never be—
 Yet danger from within besets him now,
 Known to me only—I will follow him!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—As opening in a deep wood—in front an old grey altar.

Enter Ion.

ION.

O winding pathways, o'er whose scanty blades
Of unaspiring grass mine eyes have bent
So often when by musing fancy sway'd,
That craved alliance with no wider scene
Than your fair thickets border'd, but was pleased
To deem the toilsome years of manhood flown,
And, on the pictured mellowness of age
Idly reflective, image my return
From careful wanderings, to find ye gleam
With unchanged aspect on a heart unchanged,
And melt the busy past to a sweet dream
As then the future was ;—why should ye now
Echo my steps with melancholy sound
As ye were conscious of a guilty presence ?
The lovely light of eve, that, as it waned,
Touch'd ye with softer, homelier look, now fades
In dismal blackness ; and yon twisted roots
Of ancient trees, with whose fantastic forms
My thoughts grew humorous, look terrible,
As if about to start to serpent life,
And hiss around me ;—whither shall I turn ?—
Where fly ?—I see the myrtle-craddled spot
Where human love instructed by divine
Found and embraced me first; I'll cast me down
Upon that earth as on a mother's breast,
In hope to feel myself again a child. [Ion goes into the wood.]

Enter CTESIPHON, CASSANDER, and other Argive youths.

CTESIPHON.

This is the spot which Phocion chose for meeting ;
The twilight deepens, yet he does not come.
O, if, instead of idle dreams of freedom,
He knew the sharpness of a grief like mine,
He would not linger thus !

CASSANDER.

The sun's broad disk
Of misty red, a few brief minutes since,
Sank 'neath the leaden wave ; but night steals on
With rapid pace to veil us, and thy thoughts
Are eager as the favouring darkness.

Enter PHOCION.

CTESIPHON.

Welcome !

Thou know'st all here.

PHOCION.

Yes ; I rejoice, Cassander,
To find thee my companion in a deed
Worthy the noblest thought we shar'd in childhood,
When we, two rebel youths, grew safely brave
In visionary peril. Ctesiphon,
We look to thee for guidance in our aim.

CTESIPHON.

I bring you glorious news. There is a soldier,
Who in his reckless boyhood was my comrade,
And though by taste of luxury subdued
Even to brook the tyrant's service, burns
With generous anger to avenge that grief

I bear above all others. He has made
 The retribution sure. From him I learnt
 That when Adrastus reach'd his palace court,
 He paused, to struggle with some mighty throe
 Of passion ; then call'd eagerly for wine,
 And bade his soldiers share his choicest stores,
 And snatch, like him, a day from fortune. Soon,
 As one worn out by watching and excess,
 He stagger'd to his couch, where now he lies
 Oppress'd with heavy sleep, while his loose soldiers,
 Made by the fierce carousal vainly mad
 Or grossly dull, are scatter'd through the courts
 Unarm'd and cautionless. The eastern portal
 Is at this moment open ; by that gate
 We all may enter unperceived, and line
 The passages which gird the royal chamber,
 While one blest hand accomplish the award
 Which Heaven pronounces. Nothing now remains,
 But that as all would share this action's glory,
 We join in one great vow, and choose one arm
 Our common minister. Oh, if these sorrows
 Confer on me the office to return
 Upon the tyrant's shivering heart the blow
 Which crush'd my father's spirit, I will leave
 To him who cares for toys the patriot's laurel
 And the applause of ages !

PHOCION.

Let the gods

By the old course of lot reveal the name
 Of the predestined champion. For myself,
 Here do I solemnly devote all powers

Of soul and body to that glorious purpose
We live but to fulfil.

CTESIPHON

And I !

CASSANDER.

And I !

ION (who has advanced from the wood, rushes to the altar and exclaims)

And I !

PHOCION.

Most welcome ! The serenest powers of justice,
In prompting thy unspotted soul to join
Our bloody councils, sanctify and bless them !

ION.

The gods have prompted me, for they have given
One dreadful voice to all things which should be
Else dumb or musical : and I rejoice
To step from the grim round of waking dreams
Into this fellowship which makes all clear.
Wilt trust me, Ctesiphon ?

CTESIPHON.

Yes ; but we waste
The precious minutes in vain talk ; if lots
Must guide us, have ye scrolls ?

PHOCION.

Cassander has them :
The flickering light of yonder glade will serve him
To inscribe them with our names. Be quick, Cassander !

CTESIPHON.

I wear a casque, beneath whose iron circlet

My father's dark hairs whiten'd ; let it hold
The names of his avengers !

[CTESIPHON takes off his helmet and gives it to CASSANDER, who retires with it.]

PHOCION (to CTESIPHON).

He whose name
Thou shalt draw first, shall fill the post of glory.
Were it not also well, the second name
Should designate another charged to take
The same great office, if the first should leave
His work imperfect ?

CTESIPHON.

There can scarce be need ;
Yet as thou wilt. May the first chance be mine !
I will leave little for a second arm.

[CASSANDER returns with the helmet.]

CTESIPHON.

Now, gods, decide ! [CTESIPHON draws a lot from the helmet.]

PHOCION.

The name ? Why dost thou pause !

CTESIPHON.

'Tis Ion !

ION.

Well I knew it would be mine !

[CTESIPHON draws another lot.]

CTESIPHON.

Phocion ! 'twill be thy part to strike him dead
If he should prove faint-hearted.

PHOCION.

With my life
I'll answer for his constancy.

CTESIPHON (to Ion).

Thy hand!

"Tis cold as death.

ION.

Yes; but it is as firm.

What ceremony next?

[CTESIPHON leads Ion to the altar and gives him a knife.

CTESIPHON.

Receive this steel,

For ages dedicate in my sad home
To sacrificial uses; grasp it nobly,
And consecrate it to untrembling service
Against the King of Argos and his race.

ION.

His race! Is he not left alone on earth?
He has no brother, and no child.

CTESIPHON.

Such words

The god hath used who never speaks in vain.

PHOCION.

There were old rumours of an infant born
And strangely vanishing;—a tale of guilt
Half-hush'd, perchance distorted in the hushing.
And by the wise scarce heeded, for they deem'd it
One of the thousand guilty histories,
Which, if the walls of palaces could speak,
Would show that, nursed by prideful luxury,
To pamper which the virtuous peasant toils,
Crimes go unpunish'd, which the pirates' cave,
Or want's foul hovel, or the cell which justice

Keeps for unlicensed guilt, would startle at !
 We must root out the stock, that no stray scion
 Renew the tree, whose branches, stifling virtue,
 Shed poison-dews on life.

ION (approaches the altar, and lifting up the knife, speaks).

Ye eldest gods,
 Who in no statues of exactest form
 Are palpable ; who shun the azure heights
 Of beautiful Olympus, and the sound
 Of ever-young Apollo's minstrelsy ;
 Yet, mindful of the empire which ye held
 Over dim chaos, keep revengeful wrath
 On falling nations, and on kingly lines
 About to sink for ever : ye, who shed
 Into the passions of earth's giant brood
 And their fierce usages the sense of justice ;
 Who clothe the fated battlements of tyranny
 With blackness as a funeral pall, and breathe
 Through the proud halls of time-embolden'd guilt
 Portents of ruin, hear me !—In your presence,
 For now I feel ye nigh,—I dedicate
 This arm to the destruction of the king
 And of his race ; O keep me pitiless :
 Expel all human weakness from my frame,
 That this keen weapon shake not when his heart
 Should feel its point ; and if he has a child
 Whose blood is needful to the sacrifice
 My country asks, harden my soul to shed it !—
 Was not that thunder ?

CTESIPHON.

No ; I heard no sound.

Now mark me, Ion ! thou shalt straight be led
 To the king's chamber : we shall be at hand ;
 Nothing can give thee pause. Hold ! one should watch
 The city's eastern portal, lest the troops,
 Returning from the work of plunder home,
 Surround us unprepared. Be that thy duty. [To PHOCION.

PHOCION.

I am to second Ion if he fail.

CTESIPHON.

He cannot fail ;—I shall be nigh. What, Ion ?

ION.

Who spake to me ? Where am I ? Friends, your pardon ;
 I am prepared ; yet grant me for a moment,
 One little moment, to be left alone.

CTESIPHON.

Be brief then, or the season of revenge
 Will pass. At yonder thicket we'll expect thee.

[Exeunt all but Ion.

ION.

Methinks I breathe more freely, now my lot
 Is palpable, and mortals gird me round,
 Though my soul owns no sympathy with theirs.
 Some one approaches—I must hide this knife—
 Hide ! I have ne'er till now had aught to hide
 From any human eye. [He conceals the knife in his vest.

Enter CLEMANTHE.

Clemanthe here !

CLEMANTHE.

Forgive me that I break upon thee thus :

I meant to watch thy steps unseen ; but night
 Is thickening ; thou art haunted by sad fancies,
 And 'tis more terrible to think upon thee
 Wandering with such companions in thy bosom,
 Than in the peril thou art wont to seek
 Beside the bed of death.

ION.

Death, say'st thou ? Death ?
 Is it not righteous when the gods decree it ?
 And brief its sharpest agony ? Yet, fairest,
 It is no theme for thee. Go in at once,
 And think of it no more.

CLEMANTHE.

Not without thee.

Indeed thou art not well ; thy hands are marble ;
 Thine eyes are fix'd ; let me support thee, love :—
 Ha ! what is that gleaming within thy vest ?
 A knife ! Tell me its purpose, Ion !

ION.

No ;

My oath forbids.

CLEMANTHE.

An oath ! O gentle Ion,
 What can have link'd thee to a cause which needs
 A stronger cement than a good man's word ?
 There's danger near thee. Wilt thou keep it from me ?

ION.

Alas, I must. Thou wilt know all full soon—

Hark ! I am call'd.

[Voice call, Ion !

CLEMANTHE.

Nay, do not leave me thus.

ION.

"Tis very sad [voices again]—I dare not stay—farewell!

[Exit.

CLEMANTHE.

It must be to Adrastus that he flies !
 If by his hand the fated tyrant die,
 Austere remembrance of the deed will hang
 Upon his delicate spirit like a cloud,
 And tinge its world of happy images
 With hues of horror. Shall I seek the palace,
 And, as the price of my disclosure, claim
 His safety ? No !—'Tis never woman's part
 Out of her fond misgivings to perplex
 The fortunes of the man to whom she cleaves ;
 'Tis hers to weave all that she has of fair
 And bright in the dark meshes of their web
 Inseparable from their folds. My wayward heart
 Has found its refuge in a hero's love,
 Whatever destiny his generous soul
 Shape for him ;—'tis its duty to be still
 And trust him till it bound or break with his.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Chamber in the Temple.

Enter MEDON, followed by HABRA.

MEDON.

My daughter not within the temple, say'st thou ?
 Abroad at such an hour ? Speak ! Did not Phocion

Or Ion bear her company ? 'twas Ion—
Confess—was it not he ? I shall not chide.

HABRA.

She went alone, but Ion just before
Had taken the same path.

MEDON.

She went to meet him.
I would they were return'd ; the night is grown
Of an unusual blackness. Some one comes—
Look if it be my daughter.

HABRA (looking out).

No ; young Irus,
The little slave, whose pretty tale of grief .
Agenor, with so gracious a respect,
This morning told us.

MEDON.

Let him come ; he bears
Some message from his master.

Enter IRUS.

MEDON (to IRUS).

Thou art pale :
Has any evil happen'd to Agenor ?

IRUS.

No, my good lord ; I do not come from him ;
I bear to thee a scroll from one who now
Is number'd with the dead ; he was my kinsman,
But I had never seen him till he lay
Upon his death-bed ; for he left these shores
Long before I was born, and no one knew

His place of exile;—on this mournful day
 He landed, was plague-stricken, and expired.
 My gentle master gave me leave to tend
 His mortal sickness; when his end drew nigh
 He call'd for parchment, and with trembling hand,
 That seem'd to gather firmness from its task,
 Wrote earnestly; conjured me take the scroll
 Instant to thee; and died. [IRUS gives a scroll to MEDON.]

MEDON (reading the scroll).

These are great tidings.
 Habra! is not Clemanthe come? I long
 To tell her all.

Enter CLEMANTHE.

Sit down, my pensive child.
 Habra, this boy is faint; see him refresh'd
 With food and wine before thou lett'st him pass.

IRUS.

I have too long been absent from Agenor,
 Who needs my slender help.

MEDON.

I must employ
 Thy master's power for once, to use it so
 As he would use it. Keep him prisoner, Habra,
 Till he has done my bidding. [Exeunt HABRA and IRUS.]

Now, Clemanthe,
 Though thou hast play'd the truant and the rebel,
 I will not be too strict in my award,
 By keeping from thee news of one to thee
 Most dear—nay, do not blush—I say most dear.

CLEMANTHE.

It is of Ion;—no—I do not blush,
But tremble. O my father, what of Ion?

MEDON.

How often have we guess'd his lineage noble!
And now 'tis proved. The kinsman of that youth
Was with another hired to murder him
A babe;—they tore him from his mother's breast,
And to a sea-girt summit where a rock
O'erhung a chasm, by the surge's force
Made terrible, rush'd with him. As the gods
In mercy order'd it, the foremost ruffian,
Who bore no burden, pressing through the gloom
In the wild hurry of his guilty purpose,
Trod at the extreme verge upon a crag
Loosen'd by summer from its granite bed,
And suddenly fell with it;—with his fall
Sank the base daring of the man who held
The infant; so he placed the unconscious babe
Upon the spot where it was found by me;
Watch'd till he saw the infant safe; then fled,
Fearful of question; and return'd to die.
That child is Ion. Whom dost guess his sire?—
The first in Argos.

CLEMANTHE.

Dost thou mean Adrastus?
He cannot—must not—be that tyrant's son!

MEDON.

It is most certain. Wherefore dost thou change?
He hath no touch of his rash father's pride;

For nature, from whose genial lap he smiled
Upon us first, hath moulded him her own
With happiest nurture.

CLEMANTHE.

While we talk he stains
His soul with parricide.

MEDON.

Impossible !

Ion, the gentlest——

CLEMANTHE.

It is true, my father;
I saw the weapon gleaming in his vest;
I heard him call'd !

MEDON.

Shall I alarm the palace ?

CLEMANTHE.

No ; in the fierce confusion, he would fall
Before our tale could be his safeguard. Gods !
Is there no hope, no refuge ?

MEDON.

Yes, if Heaven
Assist us. I bethink me of a passage,
Which, fashion'd by a king in pious zeal,
That he might seek the altar of the god
In secret, from the temple's inmost shrine
Leads to the royal chamber. I have track'd it
In youth for pastime. Could I thread it now,
I yet might rescue him.

CLEMANTHE.

Make haste my father!

Shall I attend thee?

MEDON.

No; thou wouldest impede
My steps;—thou art fainting; when I have lodged thee safe
In thy own chamber, I will light the torch,
And instantly set forward.

CLEMANTHE.

Do not waste
An instant's space on me; speed, speed, my father—
The fatal moments fly; I need no aid;
Thou seest I am calm, quite calm.

MEDON.

The gods protect thee!

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Royal Chamber. ADRASTUS on a couch, asleep.

Enter ION with the knife.

ION.

Why do I creep thus stealthily along
 With trembling steps ? Am I not arm'd by Heaven
 To execute its mandate on a king
 Whom it hath doom'd ? And shall I falter now,
 While every moment that he breathes may crush
 Some life else happy ?—Can I be deceived
 By some foul passion, crouching in my soul,
 Which takes a radiant form to lure me on ?
 Assure me, gods !—Yes ; I have heard your voices ;
 For I dare pray ye now to nerve my arm
 And see me strike !

[He goes to the couch.

He's smiling in his slumber,
 As if some happy thought of innocent days
 Play'd at his heart-strings : must I scare it thence
 With death's sharp agony ? He lies condemn'd
 By the high judgment of supernal Powers,
 And he shall know their sentence. Wake, Adrastus !
 Collect thy spirits, and be strong to die !

ADRASTUS.

Who dares disturb my rest ? Guards ! Soldiers ! Recreants !
 Where tarry ye ? Why smite ye not to earth

This bold intruder?—Ha! no weapon here!—
What wouldest thou with me, ruffian?

[Rising.]

ION.

I am none,
But a sad instrument in Jove's great hand
To take thy life, long forfeited—Prepare!
Thy hour is come!

ADRASTUS.

Villains! does no one hear?

ION.

Vex not the closing minutes of thy being
With torturing hope or idle rage; thy guards,
Unmann'd by revelry, are scatter'd senseless,
While the most valiant of our Argive youths
Hold every passage by which human aid
Could reach thee. Present death is the award
Of Powers who watch above me while I stand
To execute their sentence.

ADRASTUS.

Thou!—I know thee—
The youth I spared this morning; in whose ear
I pour'd the secrets of my bosom. Kill me,
If thou darest do it; but bethink thee first
How the black memory of thy thankless deed
Will haunt thee to the grave!

ION.

It is most true;
Thou sparest my life, and therefore do the gods
Ordain me to this office, lest thy fall
Seem the chance forfeit of some single sin,

And not the great redress of Argos. Now—
 Now, while I parley—Spirits that have left,
 Within this hour, their plague-tormented flesh
 To rot untomb'd, glide by, and frown on me,
 Their slow avenger—and the chamber swarms
 With looks of Furies—Yet a moment wait,
 Ye dreadful prompters!—If there is a friend,
 Whom dying thou wouldest greet by word or token,
 Speak thy last bidding.

ADRASTUS.

I have none on earth.
 If thou hast courage, end me!

ION.

Not one friend!
 Most piteous doom!

ADRASTUS.

Art melted?

ION.

If I am,
 Hope nothing from my weakness; mortal arms,
 And eyes unseen that sleep not, gird us round,
 And we shall fall together. Be it so!

ADRASTUS.

No; strike at once; my hour is come: in thee
 I recognise the minister of Jove,
 And, kneeling thus, submit me to his power.

[ADRASTUS kneels.

ION.

Avert thy face!

ADRASTUS.

No; let me meet thy gaze;

For breathing pity lights thy features up
 Into more awful likeness of a form
 Which once shone on me ; and which now my sense
 Shapes palpable—in habit of the grave,
 Inviting me to the sad realm where shades
 Of innocents, whom passionate regard
 Link'd with the guilty, are content to pace
 With them the margin of the inky flood
 Mournful and calm ;—'tis surely there ;—she waves
 Her pallid hand in circle o'er thy head,
 As if to bless thee—and I bless thee too,
 Death's gracious angel !—Do not turn away.

ION.

Gods ! to what office have ye doom'd me ! Now !

[ION raises his arm to stab ADRASTUS, who is kneeling, and gazes stedfastly upon him. The voice of MEDON is heard without, calling ION ! ION !—ION drops his arm.

ADRASTUS.

Be quick, or thou art lost !

[As ION has again raised his arm to strike, MEDON rushes in behind him.

MEDON.

Ion, forbear !

Behold thy son, Adrastus !

[ION stands for a moment stupefied with horror, drops the knife, and falls senseless on the ground.

ADRASTUS.

What strange words

Are these which call my senses from the death
 They were composed to welcome ? Son ! 'tis false—
 I had but one—and the deep wave rolls o'er him !

MEDON.

That wave received, instead of the fair nurseling,

One of the slaves who bore him from thy sight
In wicked haste to slay ;—I'll give thee proofs.

ADRASTUS.

Great Jove, I thank thee !—raise him gently—proofs !
Are there not here the lineaments of her
Who made me happy once—the voice, now still,
That bade the long-seal'd fount of love gush out,
While with a prince's constancy he came
To lay his noble life down ; and the sure,
The dreadful proof, that he whose guileless brow
Is instinct with her spirit, stood above me,
Arm'd for the traitor's deed ?—It is my child !

[ION reviving, sinks on one knee before ADRASTUS.

ION.

Father !

[Noise without.

MEDON.

The clang of arms !

ION (starting up).

They come ! they come !

They who are leagued with me against thy life.
Here let us fall !

ADRASTUS.

I will confront them yet.

Within I have a weapon which has drunk
A traitor's blood ere now ;—there will I wait them :
No power less strong than death shall sever us.

[Exeunt ADRASTUS and ION as to an inner chamber.

MEDON.

Have mercy on him, gods, for the dear sake
Of your most single-hearted worshipper !

Enter CTESIPHON, CASSANDER, and others.

CTESIPHON.

What treachery is this—the tyrant fled,
And Ion fled too!—Comrades, stay this dotard,
While I search yonder chamber.

MEDON.

Spare him, friends,—
Spare him to clasp awhile his new-found son;
O spare our Ion's father!

CTESIPHON.

Father! yes—
That is indeed a name to bid me spare;
Let me but find him, gods! [He rushes into the inner chamber.

MEDON (to CASSANDER, and the others).

Had ye but seen
What I have seen, ye would have mercy on him.

CRYTHES enters with Soldiers.

Ha, soldiers! hasten to defend your master;
That way—

[As CRYTHES is about to enter the inner chamber, CTESIPHON rushes from it with a bloody dagger, and stops them.

CTESIPHON.

It is accomplish'd; the foul blot
Is wiped away. Shade of my murder'd father,
Look on thy son, and smile!

CRYTHES.

Whose blood is that?
It cannot be the king's!

CTESIPHON.

It cannot be!

Think'st thou, foul minion of a tyrant's will,
He was to crush, and thou to crawl for ever?
Look there, and tremble!

CRYTHES.

Wretch! thy life shall pay
The forfeit of this deed.

[CRYTHES and Soldiers seize CTESIPHON.

Enter ADRASTUS mortally wounded, supported by ION.

ADRASTUS.

Here let me rest;
In this old chamber my doom'd life began,
And here I'll end it: Crythes! thou hast timed
Thy visit well, to bring thy soldiers hither
To gaze upon my parting.

CRYTHES.

To avenge thee;—

Here is the traitor!

ADRASTUS.

Set him free at once:
Why do ye not obey me? Ctesiphon,
I gave thee cause for this;—believe me now
That thy true steel has made thy vengeance sure;
And as we now stand equal, I will sue
For a small boon—let me not see thee more.

CTESIPHON.

Farewell!

[Exit CTESIPHON.

ADRASTUS (to CRYTHES and the Soldiers).

Why do ye throng death's chamber thus?
Begone!—still do ye hover round my couch!
If the commandment of a dying king

Is feeble, as a man who has embraced
 His child for the first time since infancy,
 And presently must part with him for ever,
 I do adjure ye leave us ! [Exeunt all but Ion and Adrastus.]

ION.

O my father !
 How is it with thee now ?

ADRASTUS.

Well ; very well ;—
 Avenging Fate hath spent its utmost force
 Against me ; and I gaze upon my son
 With the sweet certainty that nought can part us
 Till all is quiet here. How like a dream
 Seems the succession of my regal pomps
 Since I embraced my newborn child ! To me
 The interval has been a weary one :
 How has it pass'd with thee ?

ION.

But that my heart
 Has sometimes ached for the sweet sense of kindred,
 I had enjoy'd a round of happy years
 As cherish'd youth e'er knew.

ADRASTUS.

I bless the gods
 That they have strewn along thy humble path
 Delights unblamed ; and in this hour I seem
 As if I had lived nobly ; and I feel
 That I shall live in thee, unless that curse—
 Oh, if it should survive me !

ION.

Think not of it;
 The gods have shed such sweetness through this moment,
 That, howsoe'er they deal with me hereafter,
 I shall not deem them angry. Let me call
 For help to stanch thy wound; thou art strong yet,
 And yet may live to bless me.

ADRASTUS.

Do not stir;
 My strength is ebbing fast; yet as it leaves me,
 The spirit of my days of blameless love
 Awakens; and their images of joy,
 Which at thy voice started from blank oblivion,
 When thou wert strange to me, and then half-shown
 Look'd sadly through the mist of guilty years,
 Now glimmer on me in the lovely light
 Which at thy age they wore. Thou art all thy mother's,
 Her elements of gentlest virtue cast
 In mould heroical.

ION.

Thy speech grows fainter;
 Can I do nothing for thee?

ADRASTUS.

Yes:—my son,
 Thou art the best, the bravest of a race
 Of rightful monarchs; thou must mount the throne
 Thy ancestors have fill'd, and by great deeds
 Efface the memory of thy fated sire,
 And win the blessing of the gods for men
 Stricken for him. Swear to me thou wilt do this,
 And I shall die forgiven!

ION.

I will.

ADRASTUS.

Rejoice,

Sufferers of Argos ! I am growing weak,
 And mine eyes dazzle ; let me rest my hands,
 Ere they have lost their feeling, on thy head.—
 So ! So !—thy hair is glossy to the touch
 As when I last enwreath'd its tiny curl
 About my finger ; I did image then
 Thy reign excelling mine ; it is fulfill'd,
 And I die happy. Bless thee, King of Argos ! [Dies.]

ION.

He's dead ! and I am fatherless again.—
 King did he hail me ? Shall I make that word
 A spell to bid old happiness awake
 Throughout the lovely land that father'd me
 In my forsaken childhood ?

[He sees the knife on the ground, and takes it up.

Most vain dream !

This austere monitor had bid thee vanish
 Ere half-reveal'd. Come back, thou truant steel ;
 Half of thy work the gods absolved thee from—
 The rest remains ! Lie there !

[He conceals the knife in his vest. Shouts heard without.

The voice of joy !

Is this thy funeral wailing ? O my father !
 Mournful and brief will be the heritage
 Thou leavest me ; yet I promised thee in death
 To grasp it ;—and I will embrace it nobly.

Enter AGENOR and others.

AGENOR.

Does the king live ?

ION.

Alas ! in me. The son
 Of him whose princely spirit is at rest,
 Claims his ancestral honours.

AGENOR.

That high thought
 Anticipates the prayer of Argos, roused
 To sudden joy. The sages wait without
 To greet thee ; wilt confer with them to-night,
 Or wait the morning ?

ION.

Now. The city's state
 Allows the past no sorrow. I attend them. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—*Before the Gate of the City.*PHOCION on guard.

PHOCION.

Fool that I was to take this idle office
 At most inglorious distance from the scene
 Which shall be freedom's birth-place ; to endure
 The phantasies of danger which the soul
 Uncheer'd by action coldly dallies with
 Till it begins to shiver ! Long ere this,
 If Ion's hand be firm, the deed is past,
 And yet no shout announces that the bonds
 Of tyranny are broken.

Shouts at a distance.

Hark ! 'tis done !

Enter CTESIPHON.

All hail, my brother freeman !—art not so ?—

Thy looks are haggard—is the tyrant slain?
Is liberty achieved?

CTESIPHON.

The king is dead;
This arm—I bless the righteous Furies!—slew him.

PHOCION.

Did Ion quail, then?

CTESIPHON.

Ion!—clothe thy speech
In phrase more courtly; he is king of Argos,
Accepted as the tyrant's son, and reigns.

PHOCION.

It cannot be; I can believe him born
Of such high lineage; yet he will not change
His own rich treasury of unruffled thoughts
For all the frigid glories that invest
The loveless state in which the monarch dwells
A terror and a slave.

[Shouts again.

CTESIPHON.

Dost hear that shout?
'Tis raised for him!—the craven-hearted world
Is ever eager to accept a master,
And patriots smite for it in vain. Our soldiers,
In the gay recklessness of men who sport
With life as with a plaything; citizens
On wretched beds gaping for show; and sages,
Vain of a royal sophist, madly join
In humble prayer that he would deign to tread
Upon their necks; and he is pleased to grant it.

PHOCION.

He shall not grant it ! If my life, my sense,
 My heart's affections, and my tongue's free scope
 Wait the dominion of a mortal will,
 What is the sound to me, whether my soul
 Bears " Ion " or " Adrastus " burnt within it
 As my soul's owner ? Ion tyrant ? No !
 Grant me a moment's pleading with his heart,
 Which has not known a selfish throb till now,
 And thou shalt see him smile this greatness from him.

CTESIPHON.

Go teach the eagle when in azure heaven
 He upward darts to seize his madden'd prey,
 Shivering through the death-circle of its fear,
 To pause and let it 'scape, and thou mayst win
 Man to forego the sparkling round of power,
 When it floats airily within his grasp !

PHOCION.

Why thus severe ? Our nature's common wrongs
 Affect thee not ; and that which touch'd thee nearly
 Is well avenged.

CTESIPHON.

Not while the son of him
 Who smote my father reigns ! I little guess'd
 Thou wouldst require a prompter to awake
 The memory of the oath so freshly sworn,
 Or of the place assign'd to thee by lot,
 Should our first champion fail to crush the race—
 Mark me !—" the race " of him my arm has dealt with.
 Now is the time, the palace all confused,

And Ion dizzy with strange turns of fortune,
To do thy part.

PHOCION.

Have mercy on my weakness !

If thou hadst known this comrade of my sports,
One of the same small household whom his mirth
Unfailing gladden'd ;—if a thousand times
Thou hadst, by strong prosperity made thoughtless,
Touch'd his unfather'd nature in its nerve
Of agony, and felt no chiding glance ;—
Hadst thou beheld him overtax his strength
To serve the wish his genial instinct guess'd,
Till his dim smile the weariness betray'd,
Which it would fain dissemble ; hadst thou known
In sickness the sweet magic of his care,
Thou couldst not ask it.—Hear me, Ctesiphon !—
I lay in fever once, which slaves refused
To tend ; he glided to my lonely bed,
And soothed my dull ear with discourse which grew
By nice degrees to ravishment, till pain
Seem'd an heroic sense, which made me kin
To the great deeds he pictured ; and the brood
Of dizzy weakness flickering through the gloom
Of my small curtain'd prison caught the hues
Of beauty spangling out in glorious change ;
And it became a luxury to lie
And faintly listen. Canst thou bid me slay him ?

CTESIPHON.

The deed be mine. Thou'l not betray me? [Going.

PHOCION.

Hold!

If by our dreadful compact he must fall,
 I will not smite him with my coward thought
 Winging a distant arm ; I will confront him
 Arm'd with delicious memories of our youth,
 And pierce him through them all.

CTESIPHON.

Be speedy, then !

PHOCION.

Fear not that I shall prove a laggard, charged
 With weight of such a purpose.—Fate commands,
 And I live now but to perform her bidding.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—A Terrace in the Garden of the Palace, by Moonlight.

Enter ION and AGENOR.

AGENOR.

Wilt thou not seek repose ?

ION.

My rest is here—
 Beneath the greatness of the heavens, which awes
 My spirit, toss'd by sudden change, and torn
 By various passions, to repose. Yet age
 Requires more genial nourishment—pray seek it—
 I will but keep thee to inquire once more
 If any symptom of returning health
 Bless the wan city ?

AGENOR.

No—the perishing

Lift up their painful heads to bless thy name,
And their eyes kindle as they utter it;
But still they perish.

ION.

So!—give instant order,
The rites which shall confirm me in my throne
Be solemnised to-morrow.

AGENOR.

How! so soon,
While the more sacred duties to the dead
Remain unpaid?

ION.

Let them abide my time—
They will not tarry long. I see thee gaze
With wonder on me—do my bidding now,
And trust me till to-morrow. Pray go in,
The night will chill thee else.

AGENOR.

Farewell, my lord! [Exit.

ION.

Now all is stillness in my breast—how soon
To be displaced by more profound repose,
In which no thread of consciousness shall live
To feel how calm it is!—O lamp serene,
Do I lift up to thee undazzled eyes
For the last time? Shall I enjoy no more
Thy golden haziness which seem'd akin
To my young fortune's dim felicity?
And when it coldly shall embrace the urn
That shall contain my ashes, will no thought

Of all the sweet ones cherish'd by thy beams
 Awake to tremble with them? Vain regret!
 The pathway of my duty lies in sunlight,
 And I would tread it with as firm a step,
 Though it should terminate in cold oblivion,
 As if Elysian pleasures at its close
 Flash'd palpable to sight as things of earth.
 Who passes there?

Enter PHOCION behind, who strikes at ION with a dagger.

PHOCION.

This to the king of Argos!

[ION struggles with him, seizes the dagger, which he throws away.

ION.

I will not fall by thee, poor wavering novice
 In the assassin's trade!—thy arm is feeble—

[He confronts PHOCION.

Phocion!—was this well aim'd? thou didst not mean—

PHOCION.

I meant to take thy life, urged by remembrance
 Of yesterday's great vow.

ION.

And couldst thou think
 I had forgotten?

PHOCION.

Thou?

ION.

Couldst thou believe,
 That one, whose nature had been arm'd to stop
 The life-blood's current in a fellow's veins,
 Would hesitate when gentler duty turn'd

His steel to nearer use? To-morrow's dawn
 Shall see me wield the sceptre of my fathers:
 Come, watch beside my throne, and, if I fail
 In sternest duty which my country needs,
 My bosom will be open to thy steel,
 As now to thy embrace!

PHOCION.

Thus let me fall
 Low at thy feet, and kneeling here receive
 Forgiveness; do not crush me with more love
 Than lies in the word "pardon."

ION.

And that word
 I will not speak;—what have I to forgive?
 A devious fancy, and a muscle raised
 Obedient to its impulse! Dost thou think
 The tracings of a thousand kindnesses,
 Which taught me all I guess'd of brotherhood,
 Are in the rashness of a moment lost?

PHOCION.

I cannot look upon thee; let me go,
 And lose myself in darkness.

ION.

Nay, old playmate,
 We part not thus—the duties of my state
 Will shortly end our fellowship; but spend
 A few sweet minutes with me. Dost remember
 How in a night like this we climb'd yon walls—
 Two vagrant urchins, and with tremulous joy
 Skimm'd through these statue-border'd walks that gleam'd

In bright succession? Let us tread them now;
And think we are but older by a day,
And that the pleasant walk of yesternight
We are to-night retracing. Come, my friend!—
What, drooping yet! thou wert not wont to seem
So stubborn—cheerily, my Phocion—come! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Time—The Morning of the Second Day. The Terrace of the Palace.

Two Soldiers on guard.

FIRST SOLDIER.

A stirring season, comrade! our new prince
Has leap'd as eagerly into his seat
As he had languish'd an expectant heir
Weary of nature's kindness to old age.
He was esteem'd a modest stripling;—strange
That he should, with such reckless hurry, seize
The gaudy shows of power!

SECOND SOLDIER.

"Tis honest nature;
The royal instinct was but smouldering in him,
And now it blazes forth. I pray the gods
He may not give us cause to mourn his sire!

FIRST SOLDIER.

No more; he comes.

Enter Ion.

ION.

Why do ye loiter here;
Are all the statues deck'd with festal wreaths
As I commanded?

FIRST SOLDIER.

We have been on guard
Here by Agenor's order since the nightfall.

ION.

On guard! Well, hasten now and see it done;
I need no guards. [Exeunt Soldiers.]

The awful hour draws near;
I think that I can meet it.—Phocion comes:
He will unman me; yet he must not go,
Thinking his presence painful.

Enter Phocion.

Friend, good morrow!
Thou play'st the courtier early.

PHOCION.

Canst thou speak
In that old tone of common cheerfulness,
That breathes the promise of delightful years,
And hold thy dreadful purpose?

ION.

I have drawn
From the selectest fountain of repose
A blessed calm:—when I lay down to rest,
I fear'd lest bright remembrances of childhood
Should with untimely visitation mock me;
But deep and dreamless have my slumbers been.

If sight of thee renews the thoughts of life
Too busily,—I prize the love that wakes them.

PHOCION.

Oh, cherish them, and let them plead with thee
To grant my prayer,—that thou wouldest live for Argos,
Not die for her;—thy gracious life shall win
More than thy death the favour of the gods,
And charm the marble aspect of grim Fate
Into a blessed change: I, who am vow'd,
And who so late was arm'd Fate's minister,
Implore thee!

ION.

Speak to me no more of life!
There is a dearer name I would recal—
Thou understand'st me—

Enter AGENOR.

AGENOR.

Thou hast forgot to name
Who shall be bidden to this evening's feast.

ION.

The feast! most true; I had forgotten it.
Bid whom thou wilt; but let there be large store,
If our sad walls contain it, for the wretched
Whom hunger palsies. It may be few else
Will taste it with a relish.

[Exit AGENOR.

[ION resumes his address to PHOCION, and continues it, broken by the interruptions which follow.]

I would speak

A word of her who yester-morning rose
To her light duties with as blithe a heart
As ever yet its equal beating veil'd

In moveless alabaster ;—plighted now,
 In liberal hour, to one whose destiny
 Shall freeze the sources of enjoyment in it,
 And make it heavy with the life-long pang
 A widow'd spirit bears !—

Enter CLEON.

CLEON.

The heralds wait
 To learn the hour at which the solemn games
 Shall be proclaim'd.

ION.

The games !—yes, I remember
 That sorrow's darkest pageantries give place
 To youth's robustest pastimes—death and life
 Embracing :—at the hour of noon.

CLEON.

The wrestlers

Pray thee to crown the victor.

ION.

If I live,

Their wish shall govern me.

[Exit CLEON.]

Could I recal

One hour, and bid thy sister think of me
 With gentle sorrow, as a playmate lost,
 I should escape the guilt of having stopp'd
 The pulse of hope in the most innocent soul
 That ever passion ruffled. Do not talk
 Of me as I shall seem to thy kind thoughts,
 But harshly as thou canst ; and if thou steal
 From thy rich store of popular eloquence

Some bitter charge against the faith of kings,
 'Twill be an honest treason.

Enter CASSANDER.

CASSANDER.

Pardon me,

If I entreat thee to permit a few
 Of thy once-cherish'd friends to bid thee joy
 Of that which swells their pride.

ION.

They'll madden me.

Dost thou not see me circled round with care?
 Urge me no more.

[As CASSANDER is going, ION leaves PHOCION, and comes to him.

Come back, Cassander! see
 How greatness frets the temper. Keep this ring—
 It may remind thee of the pleasant hours
 That we have spent together, ere our fortunes
 Grew separate; and with thy gracious speech
 Excuse me to our friends.

[Exit CASSANDER.

PHOCION.

'Tis time we seek

The temple.

ION.

Phocion! must I seek the temple?

PHOCION.

There sacrificial rites must be perform'd
 Before thou art enthroned.

ION.

Then I must gaze
 On things which will arouse the struggling thoughts

I had subdued—perchance may meet with her
Whose name I dare not utter. I am ready. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Temple.

CLEMANTHE, HABRA.

HABRA.

Be comforted, dear lady;—he must come
To sacrifice.

CLEMANTHE.

Recal that churlish word,
That stubborn “must,” that bounds my living hopes,
As with an iron circle. He must come !
How piteous is affection’s state, that cleaves
To such a wretched prop ! I had flown to him
Long before this, but that I fear’d my presence
Might prove a burthen,—and he sends no word,
No token that he thinks of me ! Art sure
That he must come ? The hope has torture in it ;
Yet it is all my bankrupt heart has left
To feed upon.

HABRA.

I see him now with Phocion
Pass through the inner court.

CLEMANTHE.

He will not come
This way, then, to the place for sacrifice.
I can endure no more : speed to him, Habra ;
And bid him, if he holds Clemanthe’s life
Worthy a minute’s loss, to meet me here.

HABRA.

Dear lady!—

CLEMANTHE.

Do not answer me, but run,
Or I shall give yon crowd of sycophants
To gaze upon my sorrow.

[Exit HABRA.

It is hard;
Yet I must strive to bear it, and find solace
In that high fortune which has made him strange.
He bends this way—but slowly—mournfully.
He's pale; he's ill; how has my censure wrong'd him!

Enter ION.

ION.

What wouldest thou with me, lady?

CLEMANTHE.

Is it so?

Nothing, my lord, save to implore thy pardon,
That the departing gleams of a bright dream,
From which I scarce had waken'd, made me bold
To crave a word with thee;—but all are fled—
And I have nought to seek.

ION.

A goodly dream;
But thou art right to think it was no more,
And study to forget it.

CLEMANTHE.

To forget it?

Indeed, my lord, I cannot wish to lose
What, being past, is all my future has;
All I shall live for: do not grudge me this,
The brief space I shall need it.

ION.

Speak not, fair one,
 In tone so mournful, for it makes me feel
 Too sensibly the hapless wretch I am,
 That troubled the deep quiet of thy soul
 In that pure fountain which reflected heaven,
 For a brief taste of rapture.

CLEMANTHE.

Dost thou yet
 Esteem it rapture, then ? My foolish heart,
 Be still ! Yet wherefore should a crown divide us ?
 O, my dear Ion !—let me call thee so
 This once at least—it could not in my thoughts
 Increase the distance that there was between us,
 When, rich in spirit, thou to strangers' eyes
 Seem'd a poor foundling.

ION.

It must separate us !
 Think it no harmless bauble, but a curse
 Will freeze the current in the veins of youth,
 And from familiar touch of genial hand,
 From household pleasures, from sweet daily tasks,
 From airy thought, free wanderer of the heavens,
 For ever banish me !

CLEMANTHE.

Thou dost accuse
 Thy state too hardly. It may give some room,
 Some little space, amidst its radiant cares
 For love and joy to breathe in.

ION.

Not for me :

My pomp must be most lonesome, far removed
 From that sweet fellowship of human kind
 The slave rejoices in : my solemn robes
 Shall wrap me as a panoply of ice,
 And the attendants who may throng around me
 Shall want the flatteries which may basely warm
 The sceptred thing they circle. Dark and cold
 Stretches the path, which, when I wear the crown,
 I needs must enter :—the great gods forbid
 That thou shouldst follow in it !

CLEMANTHE.

O unkind !

And shall we never see each other ?

ION (after a pause).

Yes !

I have ask'd that dreadful question of the hills
 That look eternal ; of the flowing streams
 That lucid flow for ever ; of the stars,
 Amid whose fields of azure my raised spirit
 Hath trod in glory : all were dumb ; but now,
 While I thus gaze upon thy living face,
 I feel the love that kindles through its beauty
 Can never wholly perish ; we shall meet
 Again, Clemanthe !

CLEMANTHE.

Bless thee for that name ;

Call me that name again ; thy words sound strangely,
 Yet they breathe kindness. Shall we meet indeed ?
 Think not I would intrude upon thy cares,
 Thy councils, or thy pomps ;—to sit at distance,
 To weave, with the nice labour which preserves

The rebel pulses even, from gay threads
 Bright pictures of thy deeds, and sometimes catch
 The falling music of a gracious word,
 Or the stray sunshine of a smile, will be
 Comfort enough :—do not deny me this ;
 Or if stern fate compel thee to deny,
 Kill me at once !

ION.

No ; thou must live, my fair one :
 There are a thousand joyous things in life,
 Which pass unheeded in a life of joy
 As thine hath been, till fitful sorrow comes
 To ruffle it ; and daily duties paid
 Hardly at first, at length will bring repose
 To the sad mind that studies to perform them.
 Thou dost not mark me.

CLEMANTHE.

Oh, I do ! I do !

ION.

If for thy brother's and thy father's sake
 Thou art content to live, the healer, Time,
 Will reconcile thee to the lovely things
 Of this delightful world,—and if another,
 A happier—no, I cannot bid thee love
 Another !—I did think I could have said it,
 But 'tis in vain.

CLEMANTHE.

Thou art mine own then still ?

ION.

I am thine own ! thus let me clasp thee ; nearer.
 O joy too thrilling and too short !

Enter AGENOR.

AGENOR.

My lord,

The sacrificial rites await thy presence.

ION.

I come.—One more embrace—the last, the last
In this world ! Now, farewell !

[Exit.]

CLEMANTHE.

The last embrace !

Then he has cast me off !—No, 'tis not so ;
Some mournful secret of his fate divides us :
I'll struggle to bear that, and snatch a comfort
From seeing him uplifted. I will look
Upon him in his state ; Minerva's shrine
Will shelter me from vulgar gaze ; I'll hasten,
And feast my sad eyes with his greatness there ! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Great Square of the City—on one side a Throne of state prepared,—on the other an Altar,—the Statues decorated with garlands.

Enter CTESIPHON and CASSANDER.

CTESIPHON.

Vex me no more by telling me, Cassander,
Of his fair speech : I prize it at its worth ;
Thou'l see how he will act when seated firm
Upon the throne the craven tyrant fill'd,
Whose blood he boasts, unless some honest arm
Should shed it first.

CASSANDER.

Hast thou forgot the time
 When thou thyself wert eager to foretell
 His manhood's glory from his childish virtues?
 Let me not think thee one of those fond prophets,
 Who are well pleased to prophesy success,
 So it remain their dream.

CTESIPHON.

Thou dost forget
 What has chill'd fancy and delight within me—
[Music at a distance.]
 Hark!—servile trumpets speak his coming—watch
 How power will change him; let us stand aside.

The Procession. Enter MEDON, AGENOR, PHOCION, TIMOCLES,
 CLEON, Sages and People; ION last, in royal robes. He advances amidst shouts, and speaks.

ION.

I thank you for your greeting—Shout no more,
 But in deep silence raise your hearts to Heaven,
 That it may strengthen one so young and frail
 As I am, for the business of this hour.
 Must I sit here?

MEDON.

Permit thy earliest friend,
 Who propp'd in infancy thy tottering steps,
 To lead thee to thy throne,—and thus fulfil
 His fondest vision.

ION.

Thou art still most kind—

MEDON.

Nay, do not think of me, my son! my son!

What ails thee? When thou shouldest reflect the joy
 Of Argos, the strange paleness of the grave
 Marbles thy face.

ION.

Am I indeed so pale?

It is a solemn office I assume;
 Yet thus, with Phœbus' blessing I embrace it.

[Sits on the throne.]

Stand forth, Agenor!

AGENOR.

I await thy will.

ION.

To thee I look as to the wisest friend
 Of this afflicted people;—thou must leave
 Awhile the quiet which thy life hath earn'd,
 To rule our councils; fill the seats of justice
 With good men not so absolute in goodness,
 As to forget what human frailty is;
 And order my sad country.

AGENOR.

Pardon me—

ION.

Nay, I will promise 'tis my last request;
 Thou never couldst deny me what I sought
 In boyish wantonness, and shalt not grudge
 Thy wisdom to me, till our state revive
 From its long anguish;—it will not be long
 If Heaven approve me here. Thou hast all power
 Whether I live or die.

AGENOR.

Die! I am old—

ION.

Death is not jealous of thy mild decay,
 Which gently wins thee his: exulting youth
 Provokes the ghastly monarch's sudden stride,
 And makes his horrid fingers quick to clasp
 His shivering prey at noontide. Let me see
 The captain of the guard.

CRYTHES.

I kneel to crave
 Humbly the favour which thy sire bestow'd
 On one who loved him well.

ION.

I cannot thank thee,
 That wakest the memory of my father's weakness;
 But I will not forget that thou hast shared
 The light enjoyments of a noble spirit,
 And learn'd the need of luxury. I grant
 For thee and thy brave comrades, ample share
 Of such rich treasure as my stores contain,
 To grace thy passage to some distant land,
 Where, if an honest cause engage thy sword,
 May glorious laurels wreath it! In our realm
 We shall not need it longer.

CRYTHES.

Dost intend
 To banish the firm troops before whose valour
 Barbarian millions shrink appall'd, and leave
 Our city naked to the first assault
 Of reckless foes!

ION.

No, Crythes!—in ourselves,

In our own honest hearts and chainless hands
 Will be our safeguard :—while we seek no use
 Of arms, we would not have our children blend
 With their first innocent wishes ; while the love
 Of Argos and of justice shall be one
 To their young reason ; while their sinews grow
 Firm 'midst the gladness of heroic sports :
 We shall not ask to guard our country's peace
 One selfish passion, or one venal sword.
 I would not grieve thee ;—but thy valiant troop—
 For I esteem them valiant—must no more
 With luxury which suits a desperate camp
 Infect us. See that they embark, Agenor,
 Ere night.

CRYTHES.

My lord—

ION.

No more—my word has pass'd.
 Medon, there is no office I can add
 To those thou hast grown old in ; thou wilt guard
 The shrine of Phœbus, and within thy home—
 Thy too delightful home—befriend the stranger
 As thou didst me ;—there sometimes waste a thought
 On thy spoil'd inmate !

MEDON.

Think of thee, my lord ?
 Long shall we triumph in thy glorious reign—

ION.

Prithee no more. Argives ! I have a boon
 To crave of you ;—whene'er I shall rejoin
 In death the father from whose heart in life

Stern fate divided me, think gently of him !
 For ye, who saw him in his full-blown pride,
 Knew little of affections crush'd within,
 And wrongs which nurtur'd frenzy ; yet no more
 Let the great interests of the state depend
 Upon the thousand chances that may sway
 A piece of human frailty ! Swear to me
 That ye will seek hereafter in yourselves
 The means of sovereign rule :—our narrow space,
 So happy in its confines, so compact,
 Needs not the magic of a single name
 Which wider regions may require to draw
 Their interests into one ; but circled thus,
 Like a bless'd family by simple laws,
 May tenderly be govern'd ; all degrees
 Moulded together as a single form
 Of breathing loveliness, which finest chords
 Of sympathy pervading shall suffuse
 In times of quiet with one bloom, and fill
 With one resistless impulse, if the hosts
 Of foreign power should threaten. Swear to me
 That ye will do this !

MEDON.

Wherefore ask this now ?

Thou shalt live long ;—the paleness of thy face
 Which late appall'd me wears a glory now,
 And thine eyes kindle with the prophecy
 Of lustrous years.

ION.

The gods approve me then !

Yet I will use the function of a king,
 And claim obedience. Promise if I leave

No issue, that the sovereign power shall live
 In the affections of the general heart,
 And in the wisdom of the best.

MEDON, AND OTHERS.

We swear it!

ION.

Hear and record the oath, immortal powers !
 Now give me leave a moment to approach
 That altar unattended. [He goes to the altar.]

Gracious gods !

In whose mild service my glad youth was spent,
 Look on me now ;—and if there is a Power,
 As at this solemn time I feel there is,
 Beyond ye, that has breathed through all your shapes
 The Spirit of the Beautiful that lives
 In earth and heaven ; to you I offer up
 This conscious being, full of life and love,
 For my dear country's welfare. Let this blow
 End all her sorrows !

[Stabs himself, and falls. CTESIPHON rushes to support him.]

Ctesiphon, thou art
 Avenged and wilt forgive me.

CTESIPHON.

Thou hast pluck'd
 The poor disguise of hatred from my soul,
 And made me feel how pitiful is thirst
 For vengeance. Could I die to save thee !

CLEMANTHE rushes forward.

CLEMANTHE.

Hold !
 Let me support him—stand away—indeed.—

I have best right, although ye know it not,
To cling to him in death.

ION.

This is a joy
I did not hope for—this is sweet indeed.—
Bend thine eyes on me !

CLEMANTHE.

And for this it was
Thou wouldest have wean'd me from thee? Couldst thou think
I would be so divorced ?

ION.

Thou art right, Clemanthe,—
It was a shallow and an idle thought;
'Tis past; no show of coldness frets us now;
No vain disguise, my love. Yet thou wilt think
On that which, when I feign'd, I truly said—
Wilt thou not, sweet one ?

CLEMANTHE.

I will treasure all.

Enter IRUS.

IRUS.

I bring you glorious tidings—Ha! no joy
Can enter here.

ION.

Yes—is it as I hope ?

IRUS.

The pestilence abates.

ION (springs on his feet).

Do ye not hear !

Why shout ye not ?—ye are strong—think not of me ;
Hearken ! the curse my ancestry has spread
O'er Argos is dispell'd—Agenor, give
This gentle youth his freedom, who hath brought
Sweet tidings that I shall not die in vain—
And Medon ! cherish him as thou hast one
Who dying blesses thee ;—my own Clemanthe !
Let this console thee also—Argos lives—
The offering is accepted—all is well !

[Dies.

The curtain falls.

THE
ATHENIAN CAPTIVE.
A TRAGEDY, IN FIVE ACTS.

FIRST REPRESENTED, AUGUST, 1838.

TO

THE RIGHT HON. THOMAS LORD DENMAN,

Lord Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench,

IN TESTIMONY OF WARM ADMIRATION

OF THOSE QUALITIES WHICH WERE THE GRACE AND DELIGHT OF THE BAR,

AND WHICH HAPPILY ADORN THE BENCH,

AND IN GRATEFUL REMEMBRANCE OF MANY CHEERING KINDNESSES;

THIS TRAGEDY

IS, WITH HIS PERMISSION,

RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED.

K

PERSONS OF THE DRAMA.

CREON, King of Corinth.

HYLLUS, Son of Creon.

IPHITUS, Priest of the Temple of Jupiter the Avenger, at Corinth.

CALCHAS, an Athenian, living at Corinth.

THOAS, an Athenian Warrior.

PENTHEUS, an Athenian Warrior.

LYCUS, Master of the Slaves to the King of Corinth.

Athenian and Corinthian Soldiers, &c.

ISMENE, Queen of Corinth; second wife of Creon.

CREUSA, Daughter of Creon; twin-born of his first wife with Hyllus.

SCENE—Corinth, and its immediate neighbourhood.

TIME OF ACTION—Two days.

THE
ATHENIAN CAPTIVE;
A TRAGEDY.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Acropolis of Corinth. Creon reclining on a bench, beneath open columns—Iphitus a little behind him, in the dress of Augury, watching the flight of birds. The Sea seen far below, in the distance.

IPHITUS.

WHEEL through the ambient air, ye sacred birds,
In circles still contracting, that aspire
To share the radiance of yon dazzling beams,
And 'midst them float from mortal gaze ! Ye speak
In no uncertain language to the sons
Of Corinth, that the shames they bear from Athens
Shall speedily be lost in glories won
From insolent battalions, that have borne
Their triumphs to our gates. Rejoice, my king !
Leave mournful contemplation of the dust,
To hail the omen !

CREON.

I am so perplex'd
With the faint tracings age's weakness shapes,

That I distinguish not the winged forms
 Thou speakest of, from the mists that flicker quick
 On eyes which soon must be all dark. To me
 No omen can be otherwise than sad.

IPHITUS.

Surely, my king—for I will answer thee
 Untrembling, as Jove's minister—these signs
 Should make thy heart beat proudly; hast not felt
 Upon our loftiest eminence, the blight
 Of that dishonour which alone can slay
 The spirit of a people:—seen our fanes
 Crowded with suppliants from our wasted fields,
 Shrieking for help in vain, and mourn'd the power
 Of Athens to convert our cloudless sky,
 And the bright sea which circles us, to bounds
 Of a great prison? If thy kingly soul
 Hath shrunk—as well I know it hath—from shame
 Without example in our story, now
 Bid it expand, as our beleaguer'd gates
 Shall open wide to let our heroes pass,
 With brows which glisten to receive the laurel
 From their king's hand.

CREON.

Perchance to see him die.

O, Iphitus! thy king hath well nigh spent
 His store of wealth, of glory, and of power,
 Which made him master of the hopes and strengths
 Of others! While the haggard Fury waits
 To cut the knot which binds his thousand threads
 Of lustrous life, and the sad ghost forsakes
 The palace of its regal clay, to shrink,

Thin as a beggar's, sceptreless, uncrown'd,
 Unheeded, to the throng'd and silent shore
 Where flattery soothes not, think'st thou it can draw
 A parting comfort from surrounding looks
 Of lusty youth, prepared, with beaming joy,
 To hail a young successor ?

IPHITUS.

Still thine age
 Is green and hopeful ; there is nought about thee
 To speak of mortal sickness, and unnerve
 A soul of noble essence.

CREON.

Priest, forbear !
 The life that lingers in me is the witness
 With which I may not palter. I may seem
 To-day to wear the look of yesterday,—
 A shrivell'd, doting, peevish, weak old man,
 Who may endure while one more winter strips
 A leaflet daily from him, till he stands
 So bare of happiness, that death has scarce
 An art to make him nakeder. My soul
 Begins its solemn whispers of adieu
 To earth's too sweet companionship. Yet, hark !
 It is Creusa's footstep ; is't not, priest ?
 Is not my child approaching us ?

IPHITUS.

Afar

I see the snowy foldings of a robe
 Wave through the column'd avenue ; thy sense
 Is finer than the impatient ear of youth,

That it should catch the music of a step
So distant and so gentle.

CREON.

If thou wert
A father, thou wouldest know a father's love
'Mid nature's weakness, for one failing sense
Achieves another sharpen'd to attend
Its finest ministries. Unlike the pomps
That make the dregs of life more bitter, this
Can sweeten even a king's.

[CREUSA passes across the stage behind CREON, bearing offerings.

She passes on ;
So ! So ! all leave me. Call her, Iphitus !
Although her duty own no touch of fondness,
I will command her. Am I not her king ?
Why dost not call ?

Re-enter CREUSA, who kneels to CREON.

Ah ! thou art there, my child ;
Methinks my waning sight grows clear, to drink
The perfect picture of thy beauty in ;
And I grow gentle—Ah ! too gentle, girl—
Wherefore didst pass me by without regard,
Who have scant blessing left save thus to gaze
And listen to thee ?

CREUSA.

Pardon me, my father,
If, bearing offerings to the shrine of Jove
For my fair brother's safety, anxious thoughts
Clove to him in the battle with a force
Which made its strangest shapes of horror live

As present things; and, lost in their pursuit,
I heeded not my father.

CREON.

In the battle?
Is Hyllus in the combat 'mid those ranks
Of iron? He who hath not rounded yet
His course of generous exercise? I'm weak;
Is that the cause? Is he impatient grown
To put the royal armour on, his sire
Must never wear again? Oh, no! his youth,
In its obedient gentleness, hath been
An infancy prolong'd! It is the Power
Which strikes me with the portents of the grave,
That by the sight of his ensanguined corpse
Would hasten their fulfilment; 'tis well aim'd,
I shall fall cold before it.

CREUSA.

'Twas a word,
Dropp'd by the queen in answer to some speech
In which she fancied slight to Athens, roused
His spirit to an ecstacy; he spurn'd
The light accoutrements of mimic war;
Borrow'd a soldier's sword, and, with the troops
Who sallied forth at day-break, sought the field—
Where Jupiter protect him!

CREON.

Bid the queen

Here answer to us.

[Exit IPHITUS.

Rarely will she speak,
And calmly, yet her sad and solemn words
Have power to thrill and madden. O my child,

Had not my wayward fancy been entrall'd
By that Athenian loveliness which shone
From basest vestments, in a form whose grace
Made the cold beauty of Olympus earth's,
And drew me to be traitor to the urn
Which holds thy mother's ashes, I had spent
My age in sweet renewal of my youth
With thought of her who gladden'd it, nor sought
By vain endeavour to enforce regard
From one whose heart lies dead amidst the living.

Re-enter IPHITUS.

CREON.

Comes the queen hither? Does she mock our bidding?

IPHITUS.

At stern Minerva's inmost shrine she kneels,
And with an arm as rigid and as pale
As is the giant statue, clasps the foot
That seems as it would spurn her, yet were stay'd
By the firm suppliant's will. She looks attent
As one who caught fine hint of distant sounds,
Yet none from living intercourse of man
Can pierce that marble solitude. Her face
Upraised, is motionless,—yet while I mark'd it—
As from its fathomless abode a spring
Breaks on the bosom of a sullen lake
And in an instant grows as still,—a hue
Of blackness trembled o'er it; her large eye
Kindled with frightful lustre;—but the shade
Pass'd instant thence; her face resumed its look
Of stone, as deathlike as the aspect pure

Of the great face divine to which it answered.
I durst not speak to her.

CREON.

I see all plain ;
Her thoughts are with our foes ; the blood of Athens
Mantles or freezes in her alien veins ;
Let her alone.

[Shouts without.]

CREUSA.

Hark !—They would never shout
If Hyllus were in peril.

CREON.

Were he slain
In dashing back the dusky wall of shields,
Beneath which Athens masks her pride of war,
They would exult and mock the slaughter'd boy
With Pæans.

CREUSA.

So my brother would have chosen.

[Shouts renewed.]Enter Corinthian Soldier.

SOLDIER.

Our foes are driven to their tents, the field
Is ours—

CREON (hastily interrupting him).

What of the prince—my son ?
Thou dost avoid his name ;—have ye achieved
This noisy triumph with his blood ?

SOLDIER.

A wound,
Slight, as we hope, has graced his early valour,

And though it draws some colour from his cheek,
Leaves the heart fearless.

CREON.

I will well avenge
The faintest breath of sorrow which has dimm'd
The mirror of his youth. Will he not come?
Why does he linger if his wound is slight,
From the fond arms of him who will avenge it?

SOLDIER.

He comes, my lord.

CREON.

Make way there! Let me clasp him!

Enter HYLLUS, pale, as slightly wounded.

Why does he not embrace me?

[CREUSA runs to HYLLUS, and supports him as he moves towards
CREON.]

CREUSA.

He is faint,
Exhausted, breathless,—bleeding. Lean on me,
[To HYLLUS.]
And let me lead thee to the king, who pants
To bid his youngest soldier welcome.

HYLLUS.

Nay

"Tis nothing. Silly trembler!—See, my limbs
Are pliant and my sinews docile still. [Kneels to CREON.
Kneel with me; pray our father to forgive
The disobedience of his truant son,
His first—oh, may it prove the last!

[CREUSA kneels with HYLLUS to CREON.]

CREON.

My son!

Who fancied I was angry?

Enter ISMENE.

[To ISMENE.] Art thou come,
To gaze upon the perill'd youth who owes
His wound to thee ?

ISMENE.

He utter'd shallow scorn
Of Athens ;—which he ne'er will speak again.

CREON.

Wouldst dare to curb his speech ?

HYLLUS.

Forbear, my father ;
The queen says rightly. In that idle mood,
Which youth's excess of happiness makes wanton,
I slighted our illustrious foes, whose arms
Have, with this mild correction, taught my tongue
An apter phrase of modesty, and shown
What generous courage is, which till this day
I dimly guess'd at.

CREON.

Canst thou tell his name,
Who impious drew the blood of him who soon—
Too soon, alas !—shall reign in Corinth ?

HYLLUS.

One

I'm proud to claim my master in great war ;
With whom contesting, I have tasted first
The joy which animates the glorious game
Where fiercest opposition of brave hearts
Makes them to feel their kindred ; one who spared me
To dare another fight,—the sudden smart
His sword inflicted, made me vainly rush

To grapple with him ; from his iron grasp
 I sank to earth ; as I lay prone in dust,
 The broad steel shiv'ring in my eyes, that strove
 To keep their steady gaze, I met his glance,
 Where pity triumph'd ; quickly he return'd
 His falchion to its sheath, and with a hand
 Frank and sustaining as a brother's palm,
 Upraised me ;—while he whisper'd in mine ear,
 “Thou hast dared well, young soldier !” our hot troops
 Environ'd him and bore him from the field,
 Our army's noblest captive.

CREON.

He shall die ;
 The gen'rous falsehood of thy speech is vain.

CREUSA.

O no ! my brother's words are never false ;
 The heroic picture proves its truth ;—they bring
 A gallant prisoner towards us. It is he.

Enter THOAS in armour, guarded by Corinthian Soldiers, and LYCUS, Master of the Slaves.

SOLDIER.

My lord, we bring the captive, whom we found
 In combat with the prince.

HYLLUS.

Say rather, found
 Raising that prince whose rashness he chastised,
 And whom he taught to prize a noble foe.

CREON (to the Soldiers).

Answer to me ! Why have ye brought this man,

Whom the just gods have yielded to atone
 For princely blood he shed, in pride of arms ?
 Remove that helmet.

THOAS.

He who stirs to touch
 My arms, shall feel a dying warrior's grasp.
 I will not doff my helmet till I yield
 My neck to your slave's butchery ; how soon
 That stroke may fall, I care not.

CREUSA (to HYLLUS).

Hyllus, speak !

Why thus transfix'd ? Wilt thou not speak for him
 Who spared a life, which, light perchance to thee,
 Is the most precious thing to me on earth ?

THOAS (to CREUSA).

Ere I descend to that eternal gloom
 Which opens to enfold me, let me bless
 The vision that hath cross'd it !

HYLLUS (to CREON).

If thou slay him,
 I will implore the mercy of the sword
 To end me too ; and, that sad grace withheld,
 Will kneel beside his corpse till nature give
 Her own dismissal to me.

ISMENE (speaking slowly to CREON).

Let him breathe
 A slave's ignoble life out here ; 'twill prove
 The sterner fortune.

CREON.

Hearken to me, prisoner !

My boy hath won this choice—immediate death
Or life-long portion with my slaves.

THOAS.

Dost dare

Insult a son of Athens by the doubt
Thy words imply? Wert thou in manhood's prime,
Amidst thy trembling slaves would I avenge
The foul suggestion, with the desperate strength
Of fated valour; but thou art in years,
And I should blush to harm thee;—let me die.

CREUSA.

O do not fling away thy noble life,
For it is rich in treasures of its own,
Which fortune cannot touch, and vision'd glories
Shall stream around its bondage.

THOAS.

I have dream'd

Indeed of greatness, lovely one, and felt
The very dream worth living for, while hope,
To make it real, survived; and I have loved
To image thought, the mirror of great deeds.
Fed by the past to might which should impel
And vivify the future; blending thus
The aims and triumphs of a hero's life.
But to cheat hopeless infamy with shows
Of nobleness, and filch a feeble joy
In the vain spasms of the slavish soul,
Were foulest treachery to the god within me.
No, lady; from the fissure of a rock,
Scathed and alone, my brief existence gush'd,
A passion'd torrent;—let it not be lost

In miry sands, but having caught one gleam
 Of loveliness to grace it, dash from light
 To its abyss in silence. Lead me forth—
 [To CREUSA.] The gods requite thee !

CREON.

Has the captive chosen ?
 I will not grant another moment ;—speak !
 Wilt serve or perish ?

HYLLUS (throwing himself before Thoas).

Do not answer yet !
 Grant him a few short minutes to decide,
 And let me spend them with him.

CREON (rising).

Be it so, then ;
 Kneel, prisoner, to the prince who won thee grace
 No other mortal could have gained :—remember
 The master of my slaves attends the word
 Thou presently shall utter ; tame thy pride
 To own his government, or he must bind,
 And slay thee. Daughter, come ! The queen attends us.

[*Exeunt Creon and Soldiers.*CREUSA (to Hyllus, as she passes him).

Thou wilt not leave him till he softens.

[ISMENE follows ; as she passes THOAS, she speaks in a low and solemn tone.

ISMENE.

Live !

THOAS.

Who gave that shameful counsel ?

ISMENE (passing on).

One of Athens.

[Exit.

[Exeunt all but LYCUS the Master of the Slaves.—THOAS, and HYLLUS.

THOAS (abstractedly).

What words are these, which bid my wayward blood,
That centred at my heart with icy firmness,
Come tingling back through all my veins ? I seem
Once more to drink Athenian ether in,
And the fair city's column'd glories flash
Upon my soul !

LYCUS.

My lord, I dare not wait.

HYLLUS (eagerly to Lycus).

He yields ;—I read it in his softening gaze ;
It speaks of life.

THOAS.

Yes, I will owe life to thee.

HYLLUS.

Thou hear'st him, Lycus. Let me know the name
Of him whom I could deem my friend.

THOAS.

My name ?

I have none worthy of thy ear ; I thought
To arm a common sound with deathless power ;
'Tis past ; if thou wouldest mark me from the herd
Of nature's outcasts, thou may'st call me Thoas.

LYCUS (coming forward).

My prince, forgive me ; I must take his armour,
And lead him hence.

THOAS.

Great Jupiter look down !

HYLLUS.

Thoas, thy faith is pledged. (To Lycus.) Stand back
awhile,

If thou hast nature. Thoas will to me
Resign his arms.

THOAS (taking off his helmet).

To a most noble hand
I yield the glories of existence up,
And bid them long adieu ! This plume, which now
Hangs motionless, as if it felt the shame
Its owner bears, waved in my boyish thoughts
Ere I was free to wear it, as the sign,
The dancing image of exulting hopes,
That imaged it above a throng of battles,
Waving where blows were fiercest. Take it hence—
Companion of brave fancies, vanish'd now
For ever, follow them !

[HYLLUS takes the helmet from THOAS, and passes it to LYCUS.

HYLLUS.

"Tis nobly done ;
Nor doubt that it again shall clasp thy brow,
And the plume wave in victory. Thy sword ?
Forgive me ; I must filch it for a while :
Hide it—O deem it so—in idle sport,
And keep thy chidings till I give it back
Again to smite and spare.

THOAS.

Too generous youth,
Permit my depth of sorrow to be calm,
Unruffled by vain hope. [Takes off his sword.

Farewell, old sword,
Thou wert the sole inheritance which graced
My finish'd years of boyhood—all that time
And fortune spared of those from whom I drew

The thirst of greatness. In how proud an hour
 Did I first clasp thee with a stripling's hand,
 Fit thee, with fond exactness, to my side,
 And in the quaint adornments of thy sheath
 Guess deeds of valour, acted in old time
 By some forgotten chief, whose generous blood
 I felt within my swelling veins! Farewell!

[THOAS gives his sword to HYLLUS, who delivers it to LYCUS.

HYLLUS (diffidently).

Thy buckler?

THOAS (takes off his buckler eagerly, and delivers it to HYLLUS.)

I rejoice to part with that;
 My bosom needs no bulwark save its own,
 For I am only man now. If my heart
 Should in its throbbing burst, 'twill beat against
 An unapparell'd casing, and be still. [Going.]

HYLLUS (hesitatingly).

Hold!—one thing more—thy girdle holds a knife;
 I grieve that I must ask it.

THOAS.

By the sense

Which 'mid delights I feel thou hast not lost,
 Of what, in dread extremity, the brave,
 Stripp'd of all other refuge, would embrace,—
 I do adjure thee,—rob me not of this!

HYLLUS.

Conceal it in thy vest.

[THOAS hastily places his dagger in his bosom, and takes the hand of HYLLUS.

THOAS.

We understand

Each other's spirit ;—thou hast call'd me friend,
And, though in bonds, I answer to the name,
And give it thee again.

LYCUS (advancing).

The time is spent
Beyond the king's allowance : I must lead
The captive to the court, where he may meet
His fellows, find his station, and put on
The habit he must wear.

THOAS.

Do I hear rightly ?
Must an Athenian warrior's free-born limbs
Be clad in withering symbols of the power
By which man marks his property in flesh,
Bones, sinews, feelings, lying Nature framed
For human ? They shall rend me piecemeal first !

HYLLUS.

Thoas—friend—comrade,—recollect thy word,
Which broken now were worse disgrace than power
Can fix upon thee, bids thee bear awhile
This idle shame. I shall be proud to walk
A listener at thy side, while generous thoughts
And arts of valour, which may make them deeds,
Enrich my youth. Soon shall we 'scape the court ;
Ply the small bark upon the summer sea,
Gay careless voyagers, who leave the shore
With all its vain distinctions, for a world
Of dancing foam and light ; till eve invites
To some tall cavern, where the sea-nymphs breathe
Rare melodies ; there shalt thou play the prince,
And I will put thy slavish vestments on,

And yield thee duteous service ;—in our sport
 Almost as potent as light Fortune is,
 Who in her wildest frolics shifts the robe
 Of circumstance, and leaves the hearts it clothed
 Unchanged and free as air.

THOAS.

I cannot speak.
 Come—or mine eyes will witness me a slave
 To my own frailty's masterdom.—Come on ! [To LYCUS.
 Thou hast done thy office gently. Lead the way.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Court in the Palace of CREON.

Enter CREON and LYCUS.

CREON.

How does the proud Athenian bear his part
 In servile duty ?

LYCUS.

I have never seen
 So brave a patience. The severest toils
 Look graceful in him, from the facile skill
 With which his strength subdues them. Few his words
 By question drawn, yet gentle as a child's ;
 And if, in pauses of his work, his eye
 Will glisten, and his bosom heave, anon

He starts as from a dream, submissive bows,
And plies his work again.

CREON.

Thou dost espouse
His cause. Beware ! he hurl'd defiance on me,
Disdain'd my age, as if his pride of strength
Made him in bondage greater than a king
Sick and infirm as I am ; he may feel
What yet an old man can inflict. He comes ;
Why does he leave his duty ?

LYCUS.

'Tis the hour
Of rest—of food, if he would take it ; here
He's privileged to walk.

CREON.

Let's stand aside.

[CREON and LYCUS retire from sight.

Enter THOAS, in the dress of a slave.

THOAS.

Had I been born to greatness, or achieved
My fame, methinks that I could smile at this ;
Taste a remember'd sweetness in the thought
Of pleasure snatch'd from fate ; or feed my soul
With the high prospect of serene renown
Beetling above this transitory shame
In distant years. But to be wither'd thus—
In the first budding of my fortune, doom'd
To bear the death of hope, and to outlive it !
Gods, keep me patience ! I will to my task. [Going.

Re-enter CREON and LYCUS.

LYCUS.

Wilt thou not join thy fellows at the feast,
And taste a cup of wine the king vouchsafes
For merriment to-day?

THOAS.

What! are they merry?

LYCUS.

Dost thou not hear them?

THOAS.

They are slaves, indeed!
Forgive me, I would rather seek the quarry. [Going.

Enter Messenger.

MESSENGER (addressing CREON).

My lord, the games in honour of our triumph
Await thee,—first the chariot race, in which Thy son prepares to strive. The wrestlers next—

CREON.

Let them begin. [Exit Messenger.

Methinks yon captive's strength,
No longer rebel, might afford us sport.
Thoas!

THOAS.

I wait thy pleasure.

CREON.

Thou wert train'd,
Doubtless, at home, to manly exercise,
And I would have thee show the youth of Corinth
How the Athenians throw the quoit and wrestle.

THOAS.

My lord, I cannot do it !

CREON.

One so framed
As thou, had he been native here, would revel
In sports like these.

THOAS.

O, have I not enjoy'd them !
My lord, I am content to toil and mourn—
'Tis the slave's part ; these limbs are thine to use
In vilest service till their sinews fail ;
But not a nerve shall bend in sports I strove
When freeman to excel in, for the gaze
Of those who were my foes and are my masters.

Enter Messenger, in haste.

MESSENGER.

My lord—the prince—

THOAS.

Is he in peril ?

MESSENGER.

As his chariot, far
Before all rivals, glitter'd nigh the goal,
The coursers plunged as if some fearful thing
Unseen by human eyes had glared on theirs ;
Then, with a speed like lightning, flash'd along
The verge of the dark precipice which girds
The rock-supported plain, and round it still
In frightful circles whirl the youth ; no power
Of man can stay them.

THOAS.

Friend, I come! I come!

LYCUS (attempting to stop him).

Thou must not go.

THOAS.

Away! I'm master now. [Rushes out.

CREON.

My son! my son! I shall embrace thy corpse,
And lie beside it. Yet I cannot bear
This anguish; dead or living, I will seek thee! [Exit.

LYCUS (looking out).

How the slave spurns the dust; with what a power
He cleaves the wondering throng,—they hide him now,—
Speed him, ye gods of Corinth!

Enter CREUSA.

CREUSA.

Whence that cry
Of horror mingled with my brother's name!
Is he in danger? Wherefore dost thou stand
Thus silently, and gaze on empty air?
Speak!

Enter IPHITUS. [CREUSA addressing him.

From thy sacred lips the truth
Must flow.

IPHITUS.

Be calm; thy brother is preserved;
Urged by his furious steeds, his chariot hung
Scarce poised on the rock's margin, where the vale
Lies deepest under it; an instant more,
And Hyllus, who serenely stood with eyes

Fix'd on the heavens, had perish'd; when a form
With god-like swiftness clove the astonish'd crowd;
Appear'd before the coursers, scarce upheld
By tottering marl;—strain'd forward o'er the gulf
Of vacant ether; caught the floating reins,
And drew them into safety with a touch
So fine, that sight scarce witness'd it. The prince
Is in his father's arms.

CREUSA.

Thou dost not speak
The hero's name;—yet can I guess it well.

IPHITUS.

Thoas.—He comes.

CREUSA.

Let me have leave to thank him.

[Exeunt IPHITUS and LYCUS.

Enter THOAS.

Hero! accept a maiden's fervent thanks,
All that she has to offer, for a life
Most precious to her.

THOAS.

Speak not of it, fair one!
Life, in my estimate, 's too poor a boon
To merit thanks so rich.

CREUSA.

Not such a life
As his to me. We both together drew
Our earliest breath, and one unconscious crime
Shared; for the hour that yielded us to day
Snatch'd her who bore us. Thence, attach'd we grew,
As if some portion of that mother's love

Each for the other cherish'd ; twin-born joys,
 Hopes, fancies, and affections, each has watch'd
 In the clear mirror of the other's soul,
 By that sweet union doubled. Thou hast saved
 Two lives in saving Hyllus.

THOAS.

"Tis not meet
 That such a wretch as I, in garb like this,
 [Looking at his dress, and shuddering.
 Should listen to the speech of one so fair ;
 It will unfit me for my tasks.

CREUSA.

Thy tasks ?
 Oh hard injustice !

Enter HYLLUS, CREUSA meeting him.

Brother, join thy thanks
 To mine. [HYLLUS and CREUSA embrace.

THOAS.

No more. [Retiring.
 Grant, ye immortal gods,
 So beautiful a bond be never broken ! [Exit THOAS.

CREUSA.

He speaks of tasks. My brother, can't endure
 To see a hero who hath twice preserved
 Thy life—upon whose forehead virtue sits
 Enthroned in regal majesty—thus held
 In vilest thraldom ?

HYLLUS.

Ah ! my sweet Creusa,
 Thy words breathe more than gratitude.

CREUSA.

My brother,

I pray thee, do not look into my face.

HYLLUS.

Nay, raise thy head, and let thine eye meet mine ;
 It reads no anger there. Thy love is pure
 And noble as thyself, and nobly placed ;
 And one day shall be honour'd.

CREUSA.

Spare me !

HYLLUS.

Come,
 The banquet has begun : the king expects us. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Banqueting-Hall in Creon's Palace.

CREON, ISMENE, IPHITUS, CALCHAS, and Corinthians, seated at the Banquet.

CREON (rising).

I thank ye for my son ;—he is unharmed,
 And soon will join our revelry.

ISMENE.

We lack
 Attendance. Where is Thoas ? It were fit
 In Corinth's day of triumph, he should wait
 On his victorious enemies. Go seek him.

[Exit an Attendant.

CREON.

I would have spared his services to-day ;
 He is but young in bondage, and hath done

A glorious deed. Drink round, my friends, and pledge
My son once more.

ISMENE.

My sovereign, I should deem
So great a master in the skill to tame
The nature struggling in a free-born soul,
Would think it wisdom to begin betimes,
When an Athenian spirit should be stifled.
If thou would'st bend him to the yoke, 'twere best
Commence to-day ; to-morrow 't may be vain.

Enter THOAS.

Athenian !—slave !—'tis well that thou hast come ;
Else might we fear thou didst not feel so proud
As such a man as thou should feel, to wait
Upon his victor. Carry round the cup,
And bear it to the king, with duteous action.

THOAS.

I will endeavour, lady. [Takes the cup, and speaking aside.
So ! They join
In very openness of heart to cast
This shame upon me ; take the mantling cup
With thoughtless pleasure from a warrior's hand,
And smile to see it quiver ; bless the wine
With household names, sweet thoughts of friends afar,
Or love which death hath hallowed ; and while springs
Of cordial joy are quicken'd by the draught,
Will bid affections, generous as their own,
Shrink, agonise, and wither !

ISMENE.

Slave ! attend !

Enter HYLLUS and CREUSA.

CREON.

Hyllus, our friends have pledged thee ; take thy place,
And thank them.

HYLLUS (advancing).

I am grateful.—Thoas, thus ?

CREON.

We blamed thy absence, daughter. Sit beside
The queen.

CREUSA.

A humbler place befits me, father.

[Sits at the end of the circle.
[THOAS attempts to hand the cup.

CREUSA (to HYLLUS).

Brother, dost see ?

HYLLUS (aside to THOAS, taking the cup from him).

Thoas, I blush at this ;
Give me the cup—Corinthian citizens,
This is a moment when I cannot trust
The grace of serving you to any hand
Except mine own. The wine will send a glow
Of rare delight when minister'd by one
Who hath this day touch'd life's extremest verge,
And been most bravely rescued. [HYLLUS hands the cup.

ISMENE.

Will the king
Permit this mockery ?

CREON.

Foolish stripling, cease !
Let the slave hand the cup : and having pass'd

Another round, fill high, for I will pour
 A great libation out, with such a prayer
 As every heart shall echo while the dust
 Of Corinth drinks it in.

[THOAS takes the cup, and approaches CREUSA.

CREUSA.

Nay, tremble not.

Think thou dost pay free courtesy to one
 Who in the fulness of a grateful heart,
 Implores the gods to cherish thee with hope
 For liberty and honour.

THOAS.

Words so sweet

Reward and o'erpay all.

CREON.

Corinthians, rise !

Before the gods, who have this day espoused
 The cause of Corinth, I this votive cup
 Pour with one glorious prayer—Ruin to Athens !

[THOAS dashes down the cup he is about to hand to the King.

THOAS.

Ruin to Athens ! who dares echo that ?
 Who first repeats it dies. These limbs are arm'd
 With vigour from the gods that watch above
 Their own immortal offspring. Do ye dream,
 Because chance lends ye one insulting hour,
 That ye can quench the purest flame the gods
 Have lit from heaven's own fire ?

HYLLUS (trying to appease the guests).

"Tis ecstacy—

Some frenzy shakes him.

THOAS.

No ! I call the gods,
 Who bend attentive from their azure thrones,
 To witness to the truth of that which throbs
 Within me now. 'Tis not a city crown'd
 With olive and enrich'd with peerless fanes
 Ye would dishonour, but an opening world
 Diviner than the soul of man hath yet
 Been gifted to imagine—truths serene,
 Made visible in beauty, that shall glow
 In everlasting freshness ; unapproach'd
 By mortal passion ; pure amidst the blood
 And dust of conquests ; never waxing old ;
 But on the stream of time, from age to age,
 Casting bright images of heavenly youth
 To make the world less mournful. I behold them !
 And ye, slight insects of a day, would quaff
 "Ruin to Athens ! "

CREON.

Are ye stricken all
 To statues, that ye hear these scornful boasts,
 And do not seize the traitor ? Bear him hence,
 And let the executioner's keen steel
 Prevent renewal of this outrage.

IPHITUS.

Hold !

Some god hath spoken through him.

ISMENE.

Priest ! we need
 No counsel from thee.

HYLLUS.

Father, he will bend—

'Twas madness—was't not, Thoas?—answer me:
Retract thy words!

THOAS.

I've spoken, and I'll die.

ISMENE.

'Twere foolish clemency to end so soon
The death-pangs of a slave who thus insults
The king of Corinth. I can point a cell
Deep in the rock, where he may wait thy leisure
To frame his tortures.

HYLLUS (to Creon).

If thou wilt not spare,
Deal with him in the light of day, and gaze
Thyself on what thou dost, but yield him not
A victim to that cold and cruel heart.

ISMENE (aside).

Cold! I must bear that too. [Aloud.]
Thou hear'st him, king;
Thou hear'st the insolence, which waxes bolder
Each day, as he expects thy lingering age
Will yield him Corinth's throne.

CREON.

Ungrateful boy!

Go, wander alien from my love; avoid
The city's bounds; and if thou darest return
Till I proclaim thy pardon, fear to share
The fate of the rash slave for whom thou plead'st.

THOAS.

King, I will grovel in the dust before thee;
Will give these limbs to torture; nay, will strain

Their free-born sinews for thy courtiers' sport,
If thou recall the sentence on thy son.

CREON.

Thou wilt prolong his exile. To thy cell ! [To THOAS.
There wait thy time of death. My heart is sick—
But I have spoken.

HYLLUS.

Come with me, sweet sister,
And take a dearer parting than this scene
Admits. Look cheerily ;—I leave thy soul
A duty which shall lift it from the sphere
Of sighs and terrors. Father, may the gods
So cherish thee that thou may'st never mourn,
With more than fond regret, the loss of one
Whose love stays with thee ever !

[Exeunt HYLLUS and CREUSA.

IPHITUS (offering to support CREON).

Hold ! he faints !

CREON.

No ;—I can walk unaided—rest will cure me.

[Exit CREON.

ISMENE.

Good night, my friends !

[Exeunt all but ISMENE, THOAS, and CALCHAS.

Thou, Calchas, wait and guard
The prisoner to his cell. Thou know'st the place.

THOAS.

Lead on.

ISMENE (coming to the front to THOAS).

Thou wilt not sleep ?

THOAS.

I wish no sleep
To reach these eyes, till the last sleep shall seal them.

ISMENE.

Others may watch as well as thou.

THOAS.

Strange words
Thou speakest, fearful woman ! Are they mockeries ?
Methinks they sound too solemn.

ISMENE.

Said I not,
I am of Athens ? Hush ! These walls have echoes !
Thy gaoler is of Athens, too ; at midnight
He'll lead thee to a place where we may talk
In safety. Wilt thou follow him ?

THOAS.

I will.

ISMENE.

'Tis well. Conduct the prisoner to his dungeon.
Remember, thou hast promised me.

THOAS.

My blood
Is cold as ice ; yet will I keep the faith
I plighted to thee. [Exeunt THOAS and CALCHAS.

ISMENE (alone).

It is the heroic form
Which I have seen in watching, and in sleep
Frightfully broken, through the long, long, years
Which I have wasted here in chains, more sad
Than those which bind the death-devoted slave

To his last stony pillow. Fiery shapes,
That have glared in upon my bed to mock
My soul with hopes of vengeance, keep your gaze
Fix'd steadfast on me now! My hour is nigh! [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—*A Dungeon in the Rock.*THOAS discovered, alone.

THOAS.

Ye walls of living rock, whose time-shed stains
Attest that ages have revolved since hands
Of man were arm'd to pierce your solid frame,
And, from your heart of adamant, hew out
Space for his fellow's wretchedness, I hail
A refuge in your stillness; tyranny
Will not stretch forth its palsied arm to fret
Its captive here. Ye cannot clasp me round
With darkness so substantial, as shall shut
The airy visions from me which foreshow
The glories Athens will achieve, when I
Am passionless as ye. I hear a step;
It is that mournful lady's minister,
Who comes to waken feelings I would bid
For ever sleep. A light, as of a star,
Gleams in the narrow cavern's steep descent;
And now a form, as of a goddess, glides

M 2

To illuminate its blackness. 'Tis Creusa !
My heart is not yet stone.

Enter CREUSA.

CREUSA.

I venture hither
Thus boldly, to perform a holy office,
Which should have been my brother's.—When he fled
The city of his nurture, his last thoughts
Were bent on his preserver; he bequeath'd
His strong injunction never to forsake
The aim of thy deliverance. I exult
That Heaven thus far has prosper'd it; be quick,
And follow me to freedom.

THOAS.

Didst thou say
To freedom, lovely one ?

CREUSA.

If thou wilt haste;
The path is clear; the city wrapt in sleep;
I know the pass-word at the gates—how learn'd
By quaint device, I'll tell thee when we meet
In safety,—if we ever meet again !

THOAS.

And dost thou wish it ?

CREUSA.

Do I wish it? Yes!
And on the swift fulfilment of that wish
My life is wager'd.

THOAS.

There is more than life
To me in these sweet words—speak them again—

But no ; once heard they linger on the ear
 Which drank them in, for ever. Shapeless rocks
 That witness to the sound, rejoice ! No fane
 Of alabaster while the breeze has slept
 In circling myrtles, and the moon disclosed
 Young love's first blush to the rapt eyes of him
 Whose happy boldness raised it, rivals you
 In sanctity which rich affection lends
 To things of earthly mould. Methinks ye spring
 Rounded to columns ; your dank mists are curl'd
 Upwards in heavenly shapes, and breathe perfume,
 While every niche which caught the music speeds
 Delicious echoes to the soul. 'Twere bliss
 To dwell for ever here.

CREUSA.

O linger not ;
 The watch will change at midnight.

THOAS.

Midnight—Jove !—

I cannot go.

CREUSA.

Not go ! I ask no thanks—
 No recompense—no boon,—save the delight
 Of saving thee ; for this I've perill'd all—
 Life, freedom, fame, and now thou tell'st me, proud one,
 That I have perill'd all in vain.

THOAS.

Forbear,
 In mercy ; I have pledged my word to wait
 A messenger the queen will send at midnight,
 To bring me to her presence.

CREUSA.

To the queen?

What would she with thee? She is steel'd 'gainst nature;
 I never knew her weep or heave a sigh
 That reach'd the ear; she loves to seek a glen
 Close to the temple of Avenging Jove,
 Which sinks 'mid blasted rocks, whose narrow gorge
 Scarce gives the bold explorer space; its sides,
 Glistening in marble blackness, rise aloft
 From the scant margin of a pool, whose face
 No breeze e'er dimpled; in its furthest shade
 A cavern yawns where vapours rise so deadly
 That none may enter it and live; they spread
 Their rolling films of ashy white like shrouds
 Around the fearful orifice, and kill
 The very lichens which the earthless stone
 Would nurture;—whether evil men, or things
 More terrible, meet this sad lady there,
 I know not—she will lead thee thither!

THOAS.

No—

Not if guilt point the way, if it be sorrow
 I must endure it rather than the curse
 Which lies upon the faithless heart of him
 Who breaks a promise plighted to the wretched;
 For she is wretched.

CREUSA.

So am I. Methinks
 I am grown selfish; for it is not suffering
 I dread should fall upon thee, but I tremble
 Lest witchery of that awful woman's grief
 Lead thee to some rash deed. Thou art a soldier,

A rash proficient in the game of death,
And may'st be wrought on.

THOAS.

Do not fear for me ;
If shows of glory beckon I'll not wait
To pluck away the radiant masks and find
Death under them ; but at the thought of blood
Shed save in hottest fight, my spirit shrinks
As from some guilt not aim'd at human things
But at the majesty of gods.

CREUSA.

Forgive me ;
It was a foolish terror swept across
My soul—I should not have forgot 'twas mercy
That made thee captive.

VOICE WITHOUT.

Thoas !

THOAS.

I am call'd.
The voice came that way—still thy upward path
Is open—haste—he must not find thee here.

CREUSA.

My prayers—all that the weak can give—are thine.
Farewell !

[Exit.

THOAS.

The gods for ever guard thee !
She glides away—she gains the topmost ridge—
She's safe. Now can I welcome fate with bosom
Steel'd to endure the worst.

VOICE WITHOUT.

Thoas !

THOAS.

I come ! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Hall of Statues in Creon's Palace.

Enter ISMENE.

ISMENE.

Why tarries Calchas ? It is past the hour
Of deepest night, when he should hither guide
The avenger of my sorrows. Gods of Athens,
Whom strong expostulation hath compell'd
To look upon my shames, one little hour,
I ask your aid ; that granted, never more
Shall the constraining force of passion break
Your dread repose ! I hear a warrior's step—
Ye answer, and ye bless me !

Enter CALCHAS and THOAS.

I is well. [To CALCHAS.]

Withdraw, and wait without. I must confer
With this unyielding man, alone. [Exit CALCHAS.]

THOAS.

I wait

To learn thy will ;—why hast thou bid me leave
The stubborn rock, where I had grown as dull,
As painless as the cell to which thy breath
Consign'd me ?—thou, who urged the king to wreak
His most inglorious spleen on one too low
To be mark'd out for anger, too resolved
To heed it !

ISMENE.

I beheld in thee a soldier,
Born of that glorious soil whose meanest son
Is nobler than barbarian kings, with arm
Worthy to serve a daughter who has claim
On its best blood. But there is softness in thee,
Weakening thy gallant nature, which may need
The discipline of agony and shame
To master it. Hast thou already learn'd
Enough to steel thee for a generous deed ;
Or shall I wait till thou hast linger'd long
In morrow's mighty school ? I'm mistress in it,
And know its lessons well.

THOAS.

If thou hast aught
Of honour to suggest, I need no more
To fit me for thy purpose ; if thy aim
Hath taint of treachery or meanness in it,
I think no pain will bend me to thy will ;
At least, I pray the gods so !

ISMENE.

Hadst thou borne
Long years of lingering wretchedness like mine,
Thou wouldst not play the casuist thus. 'Tis well
For lusty youth, that casts no glance beyond
To-morrow's fight or game, which values life
A gewgaw, to be perill'd at a plunge
From some tall rock into an eddying gulf,
For the next revel's glory, to collect
The blood into the cheek, and bravely march
Amidst admiring people to swift death,

And call its heedlessness of what it yields—
 A sacrifice heroic. But who knows,
 Who guesses, save the woman that endures,
 What 'tis to pine each weary day in forms
 All counterfeit ;—each night to seek a couch
 Throng'd by the phantoms of revenge, till age
 Find her in all things weaken'd save the wish,
 The longing of the spirit which laughs out
 In mockery of the withering frame ! O Thoas,
 I have endured all this—I, who am sprung
 From the great race of Theseus !

THOAS.

From the race

Of Theseus !—of the godlike man whose name
 Hath shone upon my childhood as a star
 With heavenly power ?

ISMENE.

Reduced to basest needs

By slow decay in Attica, array'd
 In hateful splendour here, I bear small trace
 Of whence I sprang. No matter—spurn'd—disown'd
 By living kindred, I have converse held
 With those of my great family whom death
 Hath stripp'd of all but glory ; and they wait
 The triumph of this hour to hail me theirs.

THOAS.

Shame to our city, who allow'd a matron
 Of that great race to languish !

ISMENE.

Let it pass ;

A single grief—a short and casual wrong—

Which—in that sense of ages past and hopes
 Resplendent for the future, which are centred
 In the great thought of country, and make rich
 The poorest citizen who feels a share
 In her—is nothing. Had she sought my blood,
 To mingle with the dust before the pomp
 Of some triumphant entry, I had shed it ;
 And while my life gush'd forth had tasted joy
 Akin to her rapt hero's. 'Tis thy lot—
 Thy glorious lot—to give me all I live for,— Freedom and vengeance.

THOAS.

What wouldst have me do ?

ISMENE.

I have not wasted all the shows of power
 Which mock'd my grief, but used them to conceal
 The sparks which tyrant fickleness had lit,
 And sloth had left to smoulder. In the depths
 Of neighbouring caverns, foes of Creon meet
 Who will obey thee ; lead them thence to-night—
 Surprise the palace—slay this hated king,—
 Or bear him as a slave to Athens.

THOAS.

Never !

I am a foe to Corinth—not a traitor,
 Nor will I league with treason. In the love
 Of my own land, I honour his who cleaves
 To the scant graces of the wildest soil,
 As I do to the loveliness, the might,
 The hope of Athens. Aught else man can do
 In honour, shall be thine.

ISMENE.

I thought I knew
Athenians well ; and yet, thy speech is strange.
Whence hadst thou these affections,—whence these thoughts
Which reach beyond a soldier's sphere ?

THOAS.

From Athens ;
Her groves ; her halls ; her temples ; nay, her streets
Have been my teachers. I had else been rude,
For I was left an orphan, in the charge
Of a poor citizen, who gave my youth
Rough though kind nurture. Fatherless, I made
The city and her skies my home ; have watch'd
Her various aspects with a child's fond love ;
Hung in chill morning o'er the mountain's brow,
And, as the dawn broke slowly, seen her grow
Majestic from the darkness, till she fill'd
The sight and soul alike ; enjoy'd the storm
Which wrapt her in the mantle of its cloud,
While every flash that shiver'd it reveal'd
Some exquisite proportion, pictured once
And ever to the gazer ;—stood entranced
In rainy moonshine, as, one side, uprose
A column'd shadow, ponderous as the rock
Which held the Titan groaning with the sense
Of Jove's injustice ; on the other, shapes
Of dreamlike softness drew the fancy far
Into the glistening air ; but most I felt
Her loveliness, when summer-evening tints
Gave to my lonely childhood sense of home.

ISMENE.

And was no spot amidst that radiant waste
A home to thee indeed?

THOAS.

The hut which held
My foster-father had for me no charms,
Save those his virtues shed upon its rudeness.
I lived abroad :—and yet there is a spot
Where I have felt that faintness of the heart
Which traces of oblivious childhood bring
Upon ripe manhood ; where small heaps of stones,
Blacken'd by fire, bear witness to a tale
Of rapine which destroy'd my mother's cot,
And bore her thence to exile.

ISMENE.

Mighty gods!

Where stand these ruins?

THOAS.

On a gentle slope,
Broken by workings of an ancient quarry,
About a furlong from the western gate,
Stand those remains of penury ; one olive,
Projecting o'er the cottage site which fire
Had blighted, with two melancholy stems,
Stream'd o'er its meagre vestiges.

ISMENE.

'Tis plain!

Hold! Hold! my courage. Let the work be done,
And then I shall aspire. I must not wait
Another hour for vengeance. Dreadful powers!
Who on the precipice's side at eve

Have bid gigantic shadows greyly pass
 Before my mortal vision,—dismal forms
 Of a fate-stricken race—I see HIM now,
 Whom ye led follower of your ghastly train—
 O nerve him for his office !

THOAS.

Fearful woman !

Speak thy command, if thou would have it reach
 A conscious ear ; for while thou gazest thus,
 My flesh seems hardening into stone ; my soul
 Grows tainted ; thought of horror courses thought,
 Like thunder-clouds swept wildly ;—yet I feel
 That I must do thy bidding.

ISMENE.

It is well ;—

Hast thou a weapon ?

THOAS.

Yes ; the generous prince,
 When I resign'd my arms, left me a dagger.

ISMENE.

The prince ! The furies sent it by his hand,
 For justice on his father.

THOAS.

On thy husband ?

ISMENE.

Husband ! Beware !—my husband moulders yet
 Within his rusting armour ; such a word
 From thee may pierce the rock beneath whose shade
 He fell, and curse him with a moment's life
 To blast thee where we stand. If this slight king,

In the caprice of tyranny was pleased
To deck me out in regal robes, dost think
That in his wayward smiles, or household taunts,
I can forget the wretchedness and shame
He hurl'd upon me once ?

THOAS.

What shame ?

ISMENE.

What shame !

Thou hast not heard it. Listen ! I was pluck'd
From the small pressure of an only babe,
And in my frenzy sought the hall where Creon
Drain'd the frank goblet; fell upon my knees;
Embraced his foot-stool with my hungry arms,
And shriek'd aloud for liberty to seek
My infant's ashes, or to hear some news
Of how it perish'd ;—Creon did not deign
To look upon me, but with reckless haste
Dash'd me to earth ;—yes ! this disgrace he cast
On the proud daughter of a line which traced
Its skiey lineage to the gods, and bore
The impress of its origin,—on me,
A woman, and a mother !

THOAS.

Let me fly

And whet Athenian anger with thy wrongs—
My thoughts are strange and slaughterous.

ISMENE (after a pause).

Fly then ! Yes !—

[Aside.] "Twill be as certain.—I will point a way
Will lead thee through a chamber to the terrace,

Whence thou may'st reach the wall. Thy only peril
 Lies in that chamber—there my peril lies;
 Now, mark me ! If an arm be rais'd, a voice
 Be heard, or if aught mortal meet thy sight,
 Whate'er the form, thy knife is pledged to quench
 The life that breathes there.

THOAS.

I obey. Farewell !

[He takes her hand; she shivers; and drops it.]

ISMENE.

Hold off thy hand—it thrills me.—Swear !

THOAS.

By those

Who hover o'er us now, I swear !

ISMENE.

Be firm.

That is the door; thou canst not miss the path.
 Is thy steel ready ?

THOAS.

Yes ;—my breast is cold

As is that steel.

ISMENE.

Haste—the thick darkness wanes.

[Exit THOAS.]

Infernal powers ! I thank ye—all is paid—
 By thousand ecstasies in which my soul
 Grows wanton. Calchas !

Enter CALCHAS.

Wish me joy, old servant !

What dost thou think of him who left me now ?

CALCHAS.

A gallant soldier.

ISMENE.

'Tis my son—my own !
 The child for whom I knelt in vain to Creon,
 Is sent to give me justice. He is gone,
 Arm'd with a dagger, thro' the royal chamber,
 Sworn to strike any that may meet him there
 A corpse before him. Dost thou think the king
 Will see to-morrow ?

CALCHAS.

He may slumber.

ISMENE.

No—

He has sent his son to exile—he will wake—
 I'm sure he will. There ! listen !—'twas a groan !
 'Twill be but low—again ! 'Tis finish'd ! Shades
 Of my immortal ancestry, look down,
 And own me of your kindred !—Calchas, haste ;
 Secure possession of the towers that guard
 The city gates :—entrust them to our friends,
 Who, when I give the word, will set them wide.
 Haste ! 'tis thy final labour. I shall soon
 Be potent to reward the friends who clove
 To me in my sad bondage.

CALCHAS.

Whither go'st thou ?

ISMENE.

To the pale shrine of her whose withering shield
 Is dedicate to Athens. I have pray'd
 At coldest midnight there in vain, for hope

Which might shoot life along my freezing veins.
 I ask her to allay my raptures now,
 By touch of marble—I require its chillness.
 There I'll await the issue. It is sure !

[Exeunt ISMENE and CALCHAS.]

SCENE III.—The outskirts of a Wood on one side; the Athenian Camp on the other. A Watch-fire at a little distance, lighting the Scene.

PENTHEUS walking backwards and forwards as on guard.

PENTHEUS.

The cold grey dawn begins to glimmer; speed it
 Ye powers that favour Athens! From the sea,
 Her everlasting guardian, Phœbus, rise,
 To pour auspicious radiance o'er the field,
 In which she may efface the foul dishonour
 Her arms own'd yesterday! Not shame alone,
 But loss no morrow can repair, is hers!
 Archas, our army's noble leader, sleeps
 Beneath the pressure of a thousand shields;
 And Thoas, bravest of our youth, a slave—
 Perchance, ere this a corpse. Friend whom I loved,
 In whose expanding glories I grew proud
 As though they had been mine—if yet thou breathest,
 I will deliver, and if dead avenge thee!
 O, Thoas!

Enter THOAS wildly, from the wood.

THOAS.

Who pronounced that wretched name,—

That name no honest tongue may utter more?
Pentheus!

PENTHEUS.

Thoas! most welcome. Thou art come in time
To share a glorious conflict. Ha! thine eyes
Glare with a frightful light;—be calm,—thou art safe;—
This is the camp of those who will reward
Thy great emprise of yesterday, with place
Among the foremost in the battle. Come
To my exulting heart. [Offering to embrace THOAS.

THOAS.

No!—hold me from thee!—
My heart can ne'er know fellowship again
With such as thine; for I have paid a price
For this vile liberty to roam abroad,
And cry to woods and rocks that answer me
With fearful echoes:—such a price, my Pentheus—
My own unspotted conscience. Dost not see
Foul spots of blood upon this slave's apparel,
Polluting e'en that dress?

PENTHEUS.

If thou hast struck
Some soldier down to vindicate thy freedom,
Who shall accuse thee?

THOAS.

'Twas no soldier, Pentheus;
No stout opponent that my fatal knife
Dismiss'd to Erebus. A wither'd hand,
As from an old man, in the gloom stretch'd forth,
Scarce met my touch,—which could not have delay'd
My course an instant:—'twas no thought of fear,

No haste for freedom, urged me,—but an oath
 Glared on my soul in characters of flame,
 And madden'd me to strike. I raised my arm,
 And wildly hurl'd my dagger;—nought but air
 It seem'd to meet;—but a sharp feeble sigh
 Such as death urges when it stops the gasp
 Of wasting age, assured me it had done
 A murderer's office.

PENTHEUS.

Think not of it thus:—
 Thy lips are parch'd,—let me fetch water.

THOAS.

No!

I have drank fiercely at a mountain spring,
 And left the stain of blood in its pure waters;
 It quench'd my mortal thirst, and I rejoiced,
 For I seem'd grown to demon, till the stream
 Cool'd my hot throat, and then I laughed aloud,
 To find that I had something human still.

PENTHEUS.

Fret not thy noble heart with what is past.

THOAS.

No!—'tis not past!—the murderer has no PAST;
 But one eternal PRESENT.

HYLLUS (within the wood).

Help me!—answer!—

THOAS.

The voice of Hyllus!—of that noble youth,
 Who, for my sake, is outcast from his home,
 So near the camp of Athens! Should our guards

Arrest him, he will perish. Friend ! That voice
Comes on my ear like that of one who served me,
In yonder city ; leave thy watch to me
A moment.

PENTHEUS.

No—thy passion's dangerous ;
I dare not trust it.

THOAS.

See—I have subdued
The pang which wrung me. By our ancient loves
Grant me this boon—perhaps the last.

PENTHEUS.

Be quick,
For the watch presently will be removed,
And trumpets call to battle. [Exit PENTHEUS.

THOAS (calling to HYLLUS).

Here ! The hope
Of saving Hyllus wafts into my soul
A breath of comfort.

Enter HYLLUS.

HYLLUS.

I have lost my path,
Wandering the dismal night in this old wood ;
I'd seek the coast ; canst thou point out the way ?

THOAS.

Avoid it—on each side the Isthmus, ships
Of Athens ride at anchor.

HYLLUS (recognising him).

Thoas ! free—

Then I am bless'd, and I can bear my lot,
However hard ;—I guess the hand that drew
The dungeon bolts ;—how didst thou quit the palace ?

THOAS.

Why dost thou ask me that ? Through a large chamber
That open'd on a terrace—'twas all dark ;—
Tell me who lay there ?

HYLLUS.

'Tis my father's chamber.
Did he awake ?

THOAS.

Thy father ?—gods ! The king !
The feeble old man with the reverend hair ?
Art sure he rested there ?

HYLLUS.

Sure. No one else
May enter after sunset, save the queen.

THOAS.

The queen ! all's clear !—Jove strike me into marble !

HYLLUS.

Why dost thou tremble so ? as if a fit
Of ague shook thee ?

THOAS.

Nothing—only thought
Of my past danger came upon my soul
And shook it strangely. Was the old man there ?

[Stands abstractedly as stupefied.

PENTHEUS.

Thoas !

[Without.

THOAS.

Haste!—Do not lose a moment—fly!
The watch-fire that is waning now is fed
By hands which, madden'd by the foul defeat
Of yesterday, will slay thee.

HYLLUS.

Whither fly?
The camp of Athens is before me;—ships
Of Athens line the coasts,—and Corinth's king
Hath driven me forth an exile. I'll return
And crave my father's pardon.

THOAS.

No—not there—
Yet, where should the poor stripling go? O Jove!
When he shall learn—

HYLLUS.

Farewell—yet hold an instant!—
Wilt thou not send some mesage to Creusa,
That she may greet her brother with a smile?

THOAS.

Creusa smile!—Methinks I see her now—
Her form expands—her delicate features grow
To giant stone; her hairs escape their band,
And stream aloft in air;—and now they take
The forms of fiery serpents—how they hiss—
And point their tongues at Thoas!

HYLLUS.

This is frenzy;
I cannot leave thee thus:—whate'er my fate,
I will attend and soothe thee.

THOAS.

Soothe me!—Boy,
Wouldst haunt me with that face which now I see
Is like thy father's. Ha! ha! ha! Thou soothe me—
Look not upon me; by this lurid light
Thou glarest a spectre. Hence, or I will rend thee!

HYLLUS.

I rather would die here.

THOAS.

Fool! fool! away!

[Exit HYLLUS.

He's gone—yet she is with me still,—with looks
More terrible than anger;—take away
That patient face,—I cannot bear its sweetness;—
Earth, cover me!

[Falls on the ground.

Enter PENTHEUS.

PENTHEUS.

The troops are arming fast;
They call on thee to lead them.—Hark, the trump—
[The trumpet sounds.

THOAS (leaps up).

Yes; I will answer to its call. Again
Thou shalt behold me strike. In yonder field
I'll win that which I hunger for.

PENTHEUS.

A crown
Of laurel which hath floated in thy dreams
From thy brave infancy—

THOAS.

A grave! a grave! [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The interior of the Funeral Grove at Corinth. The Urn of Creon.

CREUSA discovered, bending over it.

CREUSA.

'Tis strange—I cannot weep for him ; I've tried
To reckon every artifice of love
Which, 'mid my father's waywardness, proclaim'd
His tenderness unalter'd ;—felt again
The sweet caresses infancy received,
And read the prideful look that made them sweeter ;
I've run the old familiar round of things
Indifferent, on which affection hangs
Its delicate remembrances which make
Each household custom sacred ;—I've recall'd
From memory's never-failing book of pain,
My own neglects of dutiful regard.
Too frequent—all that should provoke a tear—
And all in vain. My feelings are as dull,
Mine eyes are rigid, as when first they met
The horrid vision of his thin white hairs
Matted with blood ! Gods, let me know again
A touch of natural grief, or I shall go
Distract, and think the bloody form is here.

Enter HYLLUS.

Hyllus ! my brother ! thou wilt make me weep,

For we shall mourn as we have loved together.
Dost thou know all ?

HYLLUS.

Yes, all.—Alas ! Creusa,
He died in anger with me.

CREUSA.

Do not dwell
On that sad thought ;—but recollect the cause
Was noble—the defence of one whose soul
Claims kindred with thine own.

HYLLUS.

Unhappy sister,
What sorrow stranger than thy present grief
Awaits thee yet ! I cannot utter it.

CREUSA.

Speak ;—any words of thine will comfort me.

HYLLUS.

I fear thou must no longer link the thoughts
Of nobleness with Thoas.

CREUSA.

Then my soul
Must cease all thinkings ; for I've blended them
Till they have grown inseparable. What is this ?

HYLLUS.

That he hath made us orphans.

CREUSA.

He is free
From such ignoble murder as thyself.
What fury shed this thought into a soul
Once proud to be his debtor ?

HYLLUS.

Fair believer
In virtue's dazzling counterfeit, 'tis sad
To undeceive thee. At the break of day
I met the murderer, frantic from his crime,
In anguish which explain'd by after proofs
Attests his guilt.

CREUSA.

And is this all? Hast said
All thou canst urge against his nobleness
Which breathes in every word? Against thy life
Preserved at liberal hazard of his own?
Against the love which I was proud to bear
For him, and that with which he more than paid me?
He in some frenzy utter'd aimless words,
And thou at once believed'st him guilty! Go!
Haste and accuse him. Henceforth we are twain.

HYLLUS.

Sister, I never will accuse him.

CREUSA.

Take
My thanks for that small promise, though our souls
While thine is tainted with this foul belief,
Can ne'er be mingled as they have been. Now
I see why I was passionless. Ismene
Bends her steps hither; thou hadst best retire;
She rules the city, for her secret friends
Cast off their masks, and own themselves the foes
Of Corinth's prince.

HYLLUS.

Beside my father's urn
I shall await her.

CREUSA.

I will not expose
My anguish to her cold and scornful gaze;—
Brother, farewell awhile; we are divided,
But I will bless thee.

[Exit.]

Enter ISMENE and Guards.

ISMENE.

Wherefore art thou here,
Despite the sentence which the king pronounced
Of exile?

HYLLUS.

I have come to mourn a father,
Whose words of passion had been long unsaid,
Had his kind heart still throbb'd; and next, to claim
My heritage.

ISMENE.

Thine!—win it, if thou canst——

Enter CALCHAS.

How stands the battle?

CALCHAS.

Corinth's soldiers fly,
Routed in wild disorder. Thoas leads
The troops of Athens, and will soon appear
In triumph at our gates.

ISMENE.

Leads, say'st thou?—leads?
Let Corinth's gates stand open to admit
The hero,—give him conduct to the hall,
Where sculptured glories of Corinthian kings
Shall circle him who shamed them,—there, alone,
I would crave speech with him.

[Exit CALCHAS.]

HYLLUS (to the Soldiers).

My countrymen,

Will ye endure this shame? I am a youth
Unskill'd in war; but I have learn'd to die
When life is infamy. If ye will join me,
We'll close the gates with ramparts of the slain.
Does no heart answer mine?

ISMENE.

Their swords shall curb
Thy idle ravings. Athens triumphs now!—
Attend him to his chamber, and beware
He leaves it not.

HYLLUS.

For this I ought to thank thee:
I would not see my country's foul disgrace;
But thou shalt tremble yet.

[Exit, guarded.

ISMENE.

Now shall I clasp him—
Clasp him a victor o'er my country's foes;—
The slayer of him most hated. Double transport!
The dream of great revenge I lived upon
Was never bright with image of such joy,
As now comes link'd with vengeance! Thoas, haste!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Gates of Corinth.

Shouts without. THOAS in armour, with his sword drawn and Athenian Soldiers, as in pursuit.

THOAS.

Here we may breathe awhile from conquest; 'twas
A noble chase, we scarce may call it battle;

Success so quick has followed on success,
 That we shall want more time to count our glories
 Than we have spent in winning them. The foe
 Is niggard, and will not allow our arms
 One day of conflict. We have won too soon.
 Grant me, great gods! instead of years of life,
 Another such an hour.

SOLDIER.

My lord, here's wine;
 'Tis from the tents of Corinth.

THOAS.

Not a drop.

My heart's too light—too jocund to allow
 Another touch of ecstacy, derived
 From mortal fruitage; nay, were it Jove's nectar,
 I'd set the untasted cup of crystal down,
 And drink not till the glorious work were finish'd!
 Soldiers! we sup in Corinth! You'll not wait
 Past time of hunger, if ye are not faint
 From rapid conquest.

Enter PENTHEUS and Soldiers.

PENTHEUS.

Noble leader, hail!

Thy country's heroes bless thee with the sense
 Of their delighted wonder! With one voice
 They greet thee as the winner of this fight,
 To which thou led'st them. Never was a scheme
 Of battle, plann'd in council of the sage,
 Form'd with a skill more exquisite than that
 Which, in the instant thou wert call'd to lead us,

Flash'd on thy spirit, and in lines of fire
From thine was manifest to ours ! Art wounded ?

THOAS.

A very scratch ; I blush to think no more :
Some mantling blood lost in the strife had served
To moderate my fervours.

PENTHEUS.

See ! our comrades

Have snatched a branch from the Corinthian laurels
To wreath thy brow ! Soldiers, 'tis much I ask ;
But when I tell ye I have watch'd your chief
From the first flash that dazzled in his eye
At tale of glory, ye may yield to me
The pride and joy of offering him this honour.

[Soldier gives the wreath to PENTHEUS, who gives it to THOAS.
I thank ye, comrades.

THOAS.

The immortal gods

Grant me a double blessing in the friend
From whom I take this happiness. O Pentheus !
I have mused fondly—proudly—on the fate
Which waits upon my country ; when the brow
Which thou wouldest deck, was bared to mist and storm ;
When every moonlit fountain which displaced
The blackness of the moss-grown hillock told
Of the pure beauty which her name should keep,
Empearling starless ages ; when each wave
That rippled in her harbour, to my ear
Spoke glad submission to the Queen of Cities ;
But never, 'mid my burning hopes for Athens,
Did I believe that I should stand thus crown'd,

Her laurell'd soldier ! Friends, the sun-light wanes,
And we must sup in Corinth !

PENTHEUS.

See, the gates
Open to welcome us !

[The gates open.]

THOAS.

Without a blow ?
We shall not earn our banquet. So expands
Before the vision of my soul, the east
To the small cluster of her godlike sons.
Let Asia break the mirror of our sea
With thousand sterns of ivory, and cast
A glare upon it from barbarian gold,
In one great day her navies shall be swept
As glittering clouds before the sun-like face
Of free Athenian valour ! Friends, forgive me ;
I have been used to idle thought, nor yet
Have learn'd to marry it to action ; blest
To-day in both.

PENTHEUS.

A herald from the city.

Enter CALCHAS.

CALCHAS.

I am commission'd by the queen to speak
With Thoas.

THOAS.

I am here.

[Trembles, and supports himself, as paralysed, on PENTHEUS.]

Thou art commission'd
From the infernal powers to cross my path
Of glorious triumph, with a shape that brings

Before me terrible remembrance, which
Had strangely vanish'd from me.

PENTHEUS (to CALCHAS).

He is ill,—

Retire.

THOAS.

No—should the herald fade in air
He would not leave his office unfulfill'd,
One look hath smit my soul.

PENTHEUS.

Is this a dream ?

THOAS.

No—'tis a dreadful waking—I have dreamt
Of honour, and have struggled in that dream
For Athens, as if I deserved to fight
Unsullied in her cause. The joy of battle
In eddies as a whirlpool had engulf'd
The thought of one sad moment, when my soul
Was blasted ; but it rises in the calm,
Like form of slaughter'd seamen, that pursues
The murderous vessel which swept proudly on,
When his death-gurgle ended. Hence, vain wreath !—
Thou wouldst entwine my brow with serpent coldness,
And wither instant there. [Tears the wreath.

So vanish all
My hopes ; they are gone—I'm fit to answer thee.
Who sent thee here ?

[To CALCHAS.

CALCHAS.

The queen.

o

THOAS.

A worthy mistress
Of such a slave—thy errand ?

CALCHAS.

She who rules
In Corinth now, admits the victor's power,
And bids the gates thus open : she requires
A conference with Thoas in the hall
Next to the royal chamber—thou hast been
There, as I think, my lord.

THOAS.

I know it well ;
Lead, dreadful herald, on !

PENTHEUS.

The troops attend
The order of their general.

THOAS (to CALCHAS).

Why dost wait ?
Thou see'st that I obey thy call.

PENTHEUS.

My friend,
Thy blood is fever'd—thou may'st choose thy time—
Postpone this meeting.

THOAS (to CALCHAS).

Why dost tarry ? turn
Thy face away—it maddens me—go on !

[Exit after CALCHAS.

SOLDIER (to PENTHEUS).

My lord, we wait for orders ; this strange man,
Half warrior and half rhapsodist, may bring
Our army into peril.

PENTHEUS.

Fear it not;

He has all elements of greatness in him,
 Although as yet not perfectly commingled,
 Which is sole privilege of gods. They cast
 Such piteous weakness on the noblest men
 That we may feel all mortal. 'Tis a cloud
 Which speedily will pass, and thou shalt see
 The hero shine as clearly forth in council
 As he has done in victory; meanwhile
 He leaves us pleasant duty—form your lines—
 Sound trumpets—march triumphant into Corinth !

[The Athenians enter Corinth.

SCENE III.—The Hall of Statues in the Palace, same as in Third Act.

THOAS (alone).

Again I stand within this awful hall;
 I found the entrance here, without the sense
 Of vision; for a foul and clinging mist,
 Like the damp vapour of a long-closed vault,
 Is round me. Now its objects start to sight
 With terrible distinctness! Crimson stains
 Break sudden on the walls! The fretted roof
 Grows living! Let me hear a human voice,
 Or I shall play the madman!

Enter ISMENE richly dressed.

ISMENE.

Noble soldier,
 I bid thee welcome, with the rapturous heart

Of one, for whom thy patriot arm has wrought
 Deliverance and revenge—but more for Athens
 Than for myself, I hail thee : why dost droop ?
 Art thou oppressed with honours, as a weight
 Thou wert not born to carry ? I will tell
 That which shall show thee born to such a fortune,
 And shall requite thee with a joy as great
 As that thou hast conferr'd. Thy life was hid
 Beneath inglorious accident, till force
 Of its strong current urged it forth to-day,
 To glisten and expand in sun-light. Know
 That it has issued from a fountain bright
 As is its destiny.—Thou sharest with me
 The blood of Theseus.

THOAS.

If thy speech is true,
 And I have something in me which responds
 To its high tidings, I am doom'd to bear
 A heavier woe than I believed the gods
 Would ever lay on mortal ; I have stood
 Unwittingly upon a skiey height,
 By ponderous gloom encircled,—thou hast shown
 The mountain-summit mournfully reversed
 In the black mirror of a lurid lake,
 Whose waters soon shall cover me,—I've stain'd
 A freeman's nature ; thou hast shown it sprung
 From gods and heroes, and wouldst have me proud
 Of the foul sacrilege.

ISMENE.

If that just deed,
 Which thus disturbs thy fancy, were a crime,

What is it in the range of glorious acts,
Past and to come, to which thou art allied,
But a faint speck, an atom, which no eye
But thine would dwell on ?

THOAS.

It infects them all ;

Spreads out funereal blackness as they pass
In sad review before me. Hadst thou pour'd
This greatness on my unpolluted heart,
How would it have exulted ! Now it racks me,
From thee, strange sorceress, who snared my soul
Here—in this dreadful hall !—May the strong curse
Which breathes from out the ruins of a nature
Blasted by guilt—

ISMENE.

Hold ! Parricide—forbear !

She whom thou hast avenged, she whom the death
Of Creon hath set free,—whom thou wouldest curse,
Is she who bore thee !

THOAS.

Thou !

ISMENE.

Dost doubt my word !

Is there no witness in thy mantling blood
Which tells thee whence 'twas drawn ? Is nature silent ?
If from the mists of infancy, no form
Of her who, sunk in poverty, forgat
Its ills in tending thee, and made the hopes
Which glimmer'd in thy smiles her comfort,—gleams
Upon thee yet ;—hast thou forgot the night
When foragers from Corinth toss'd a brand
Upon the roof that sheltered thee ; dragg'd out

The mother from the hearthstone where she sat
 Resign'd to perish, shrieking for the babe
 Whom from her bosom they had rent? That child
 Now listens. As in rapid flight, I gazed
 Backward upon the blazing ruin, shapes
 Of furies, from amid the fire, look'd out
 And grinn'd upon me. Every weary night
 While I have lain upon my wretched bed,
 They have been with me, pointing to the hour
 Of vengeance. Thou hast wrought it for me, son!
 Embrace thy mother!

THOAS.

O that the firm earth
 Would open, and enfold me in its strong
 And stifling grasp, that I might be as though
 I ne'er was born!

ISMENE.

Dost mock me? I have clasp'd
 Sorrow and shame as if they were my sons,
 To keep my heart from hardening into stone;
 The promised hour arrived; and when it came,
 The furies, in repayment, sent an arm,
 Moulded from mine, to strike the oppressor dead.
 I triumph'd,—and I sent thee!

THOAS.

Dost confess
 That, conscious of my birth, thou urged my knife
 Against the king?

ISMENE.

Confess!—I glory in it!—
 Thy arm hath done the purpose of my will;

For which I bless it. Now I am thy suitor.
 Victorious hero! Pay me for those cares
 Long past, which man ne'er guesses at;—for years
 Of melancholy patience, which young soldiers
 Have not a word to body forth; for all,—
 By filling for a moment these fond arms,
 Which held thee first.

THOAS (shrinking from her).

I cannot. I will kneel
 To thank thee for thy love, ere thou didst kill
 Honour and hope;—then grovel at thy feet,
 And pray thee trample out the wretched life
 Thou gav'st me.

ISMENE.

Ha! Beware, unfeeling man:—
 I had opposed, had crush'd all human loves,
 And they were wither'd; thou hast call'd them forth,
 Rushing in crowds from memory's thousand cells,
 To scoff at them. Beware! They will not slumber,
 But sting like scorpions.

Enter IPHITUS.

Wherefore dost intrude
 On this high conference?

IPHITUS.

The people cry
 That solemn inquisition should be held
 For Creon's blood!—else do they fear the gods
 Will visit it on them.

ISMENE.

They need not fear.
 It will be well avenged.

IPHITUS.

To thee, Ismene,
That which I next must speak, is of dear import;—
Wilt hear it in this noble stranger's presence?

ISMENE.

Say on, old man.

IPHITUS.

From the decaying altar,
Just as the gates were open'd, breathed a voice
In whisper low, yet heard through each recess
Of Jove's vast temple, bidding us to seek
Of thee, Ismene, who the murderer is,
And summon thee to the same fearful spot,
To speak it there.

ISMENE (to Thoas).

Athenian! dost thou hear?

THOAS.

I hear.

IPHITUS.

The hostile nations lay aside
Their quarrel, till this justice to the dead
Be render'd. Chiefs of each will guard the fane,
And wait the solemn issue.—In their name
And in the mightier name of him whose shrine
Hath burst long silence, I command thee, queen,
Thou presently be there.

ISMENE.

I shall obey—
Beside the altar place the regal seat;
And there, in state befitting Corinth's queen,
I'll take my place.

[To Thoas.

Farewell! Thou wilt be there!

THOAS.

Be sure I will not fail.

ISMENE.

'Tis well! 'Tis well! [Exit.

IPHITUS.

Thou saidst thou shouldst attend?

THOAS.

I shall. What more
Would'st thou have with me?

IPHITUS.

I would ask a band
Of the most noble of Athenian youth,
To witness this procedure; and to lend
Their conduct, should the murderer stand reveal'd,
To keep the course of justice unassail'd,
And line the path of death.

THOAS.

All that can make
The wretch accrû'd, shall wait him. Let me breathe
Alone a moment. [Exit IPHITUS.How they'll start to see
The guilty one descend the solemn steps,
And hang their heads for shame, and turn their eyes
In mercy from him! [Going.Enter CREUSA.

CREUSA.

For a moment hear me—
I would not break on thy triumphant hours,
But for my brother's sake. Do not refuse,
For if he wrong'd thee by a frantic thought,

There was one ready to defend thy honour
From slightest taint !

THOAS.

What taint ? the breath of infamy
Spreads o'er my name already !

CREUSA.

Do not ask—
'Twas a wild thought ;—but there are tongues which make
As false a charge ; tongues which have power to crush
The guiltless !—They have murmur'd that this crime
Is that of Hyllus !

THOAS.

Hyllus the unsullied !

CREUSA.

I knew that thou would'st say so—that no force
Of circumstance would weigh in thy pure thought
Against the beauty of his life. They found him
Just after day-break, suddenly return'd
From exile, in the chamber of the king,
Gazing with bloodless aspect on a sight
Of bloodshed ;—yet thou dost not think 'twas he
That with a craven hand—

THOAS.

O no !

CREUSA.

And thou
Wilt plead his cause—wilt save him from the fate
That threatens his young life ?

THOAS.

My own shall first
Be quench'd !

CREUSA.

The gods repay thee for the word !
O brother, brother ! could'st thou wrong this heart
With foul suspicion ? Why dost turn away,
And shrink and shudder in the warrior's dress,
As when I thank'd thee for that brother's life,
At the slave's vest which then, in thy proud thought,
Debased the wearer ?

THOAS.

O, I thought so then !
Now I would give the treasures of the deep,
Nay more—the hope of glory—to resume
Those servile garments with the spotless thoughts
Of yesterday.

Enter Messenger.

MESSENGER.

My general, Pentheus, asks
If, by thy sanction, Iphitus requires
His presence in the temple ?

THOAS.

Pentheus ?—Yes.

CREUSA (THOAS turns away).

Why in the temple ? wilt not speak ?

MESSENGER.

The priest
There summons all to some high trial.

CREUSA.

I see it!—

They meet to judge my brother. I will fly—

THOAS.

Thou must not, lady—in that fearful place
 Horrors unguess'd at by thy gentle nature
 Will so amaze thee that thou wilt not know
 A peaceful moment more.

CREUSA.

And what have I

To do with peace? I am no longer young,
 For moments fill'd with love and conquest wrought
 The work of years. I feel that I could point
 The murderer out with dreadful skill—could mark
 The livid paleness, read the shrinking eye,
 Detect the empty grasping of the hand
 Renewing fancied slaughter;—why dost turn
 Thus coldly from me? Ah! thou hast forgot
 The vows which, when in slavery, thou offer'd,
 And I was proud to answer—if not, Thoas,
 Once press my hand; O gods! he lets it fall!—
 So withers my last hope—so my poor heart
 Is broken.

[Faints.]

THOAS (to Messenger).Take her gently in. [Messenger supports her out.

One glance.

[Looks at her and shudders.]

O that the beauty I have loved and worshipp'd
 Should be a thing to torture me!—'Tis just. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Interior of the Temple of Jupiter the Avenger—ISMENE seated in the midst, in a Chair of State—Corinthians on the right, and Athenians on the left side of the Temple—At the extremity on the right side, HYLLUS standing—At the extremity of the left, THOAS seated.

IPHITUS.

Corinthians and Athenians, late opposed
In mortal conflict, dedicated now
To solemn work of justice, hear the will
Of the Avenging Power, beneath whose roof
Ye stand thus marshall'd! Royal blood has stain'd
A palace floor :—not shed in blazing war,
But in night's peace ; not some hot soldier's blood,
But the thin current of a frame made sacred
To Orcus' gentlest arrow. Heaven requires
Both nations to unite in dealing death
Upon the slayer, who, unslain, will draw
Its withering curse on both. In yonder shrine
Which dim tradition's fearful whispers made
A terror to my infancy, a voice,
Which breathed fell murmurs to ancestral ears,
Breaks centuries of silence to pronounce
The queen as gifted to direct the shaft
To the cursed head ;—and every sign around us
By which the world invisible, when charged
With bloody secret, struggles to subdue
Things visible to organs which may send

Its meaning to the startled soul, attest
The duty I assume.—Ismene !

ISMENE.

Priest

Of Jove, I am attendant to thy summons ;—
What is thy wish ?

IPHITUS.

Sad widow of a king

Whose feeble life some cruel hand hath stopp'd,
I do adjure thee, by those hoary hairs,
That changed their hue from raven whilst thou shared
His mansion ;—by celestial powers, who watch
Our firmness now ;—and by those fearful gods,
Whom 'tis unblest to mention, lay aside
All terror, all affection—all remorse
If cause of penitence thou hast,—to rend
The veil of darkness which the murderer wears,
And give him to his destiny. Begin
The solemn strain which shall attune our souls
To hearken and to execute !

[Solemn music.]

IPHITUS.

Ismene,

Speak : Dost thou know the slayer ?

ISMENE.

Yes !

IPHITUS.

Dost thou

Behold him now ?

ISMENE (looking wildly round).

I do not see the faces
Or know the names of all. Who is the man
That at the right side of the circle stands ?

IPHITUS.

The youth with head erect and cloudless brow ?
 That is the orphan'd Hyllus.

ISMENE.

Who is he
 That sits upon the other side, apart,
 With face averted ?

[THOAS turns his head suddenly, and looks upon her.

I behold him now.

It is a dreadful duty you exact
 From me—a woman. If I speak the name,
 What sentence follows ?

IPHITUS.

Death.

ISMENE.

How soon perform'd ?

IPHITUS.

The Fates require that he thou shalt denounce
 As guilty, must be led in silence hence,
 And none behold him after, save his slayers.
 Attend once more ! Thou hast declared thou know'st
 The guilty one ! I ask thee—is he here ?

ISMENE.

O gods ! He is.

IPHITUS.

Name him !

CALCHAS.

She shudders ! See,—
 I think she cannot speak !

IPHITUS.

If quivering tongue
Refuse its office, point the victim out.

[ISMENE rises; turns towards THOAS, who rises, and confronts her; she trembles, pauses, and sinks into her seat.

IPHITUS.

Thou hast confess'd the guilty one is here;
Where stands he?

[ISMENE rises; points to HYLLUS, shrieks "There!" and falls back senseless on her seat.

THOAS.

'Tis false!

[CREUSA rushes forward and embraces HYLLUS.

CREUSA.

Most false! O murderer!
Protect him, noble Thoas!

HYLLUS.

Peace, my sister:—
Implore no mortal aid; let us be patient,
And suffer calmly what the gods decree.
My life may satisfy.

IPHITUS.

It cannot be!

Hold—stir not—breathe not—from that shrine the voice
Of Heaven will answer hers. Do ye not hear? [A pause.
Hark!—It is voiceless, and the youth is doom'd.

THOAS.

Forbear, deluded judges; look upon him!
See on his forehead nature's glorious seal
Of innocence, outspeaking thousand voices,
Which shining in the presence of the gods,
Still shows him guiltless.

IPHITUS.

Prove it.

THOAS.

With my life-blood!

O could ye place me in some dizzy cleft
 Of inmost Thracian hills, when ribb'd with ice,
 To hear from every rocky shelf a howl
 Of wolves aroused to famine,—I would stand—
 Calm,—O far calmer than I stand,—to wait
 Their fangs, and let my tortured sinews' strength
 Attest his cause;—'twere nothing—'twere no pain—
 To what the spirit feels.

HYLLUS (to THOAS, aside).

Thou wilt disclose
 Thy secret;—keep it. Leave me to my doom.

THOAS.

Never! Corinthians, hear me——

ISMENE (recovering).

What is this?
 Why waits the parricide still there? Who dares
 Dispute my sentence?

THOAS.

I!

ISMENE.

Be silent. She
 Who most in all the world should have command
 O'er thee, requires thy silence.

PENTHEUS (stepping forward from the Athenian rank).

By what right

Dost thou—Queen of the vanquish'd—dare command
The leader of the conquerors ?

ISMENE.

By a mother's !

[THOAS sinks into his seat—ISMENE descends and stands beside him.

ISMENE.

Athenians—victors !—'tis your fitting name,
By which I gladly hail you, ye behold
One whom ye left to suffer, but who boasts
Your noblest blood. See ! I command my son
To quit this roof, and leave me to the work
The gods have destined for me.

THOAS.

Stand aside !

I have a suit I would prefer alone,
Which may save guilt and sorrow.

IPHITUS (to HYLLUS).

Lean on me.

[To THOAS. Be brief.

HYLLUS.

I have no need ; yet I will take
This thy last kindness ; for I can accept it
Without a blush or shudder.

[All retire, leaving THOAS and ISMENE in front.

THOAS.

Why hast heap'd
Foul crime on crime ?

ISMENE.

Son ! there has been no crime
Except for thee. The love that thou hast scorn'd

From the heart's long-closed shrine, outwhisper'd fate
And saved thee.

THOAS.

Saved me! Thou may'st save me yet;
Recall thy sentence! Give me truth and death!

ISMENE.

And own my falsehood? No! Let us go hence
Together.

THOAS.

And permit this youth to die!
O that some god would mirror to thy soul
Our mortal passage, while the arid sand
We pace; the yellow, sunless, sky above us;
And forms distort with anguish, which shall meet
Each vain attempt to be alone, enclose
The conscious blasters of the earth, till forced
To gaze upon each other, we behold,
As in eternal registry, the curse
Writ in the face of each! No; let us pray
For justice and for peace!

ISMENE.

If thou remain,
And risk dishonour to our house and me,
The poisonous cave below shall be my home,
And shelter me for ever!

THOAS.

Bravely thought—

As fits a matron of heroic line;
Be great in penitence, and we shall meet
Absolved, where I may join my hand to thine,
And walk in duteous silence by thy side.

ISMENE.

And couldst thou love me then ?

THOAS.

Love thee ! My mother,
When thou didst speak that word, the gloom of years
Was parted,—and I knew again the face
Which linger'd o'er my infancy.—so pale,
So proud, so beautiful ! I kneel again,
A child, and plead to that unharden'd heart,
By all the long past hours of priceless love,
To let my soul pass forth in penitence,
And bless thee in its parting !

ISMENE.

Never !

THOAS (rising).

Yes !

Haste ere the roof shall fall, and crush the germ
Of sweet repentance in us : take thy seat,
And speak as thy heart dictates—

[Drawing ISMENE towards her seat.

Hear again !

ISMENE.

Unhand me—rebel son ! Assembled Chiefs,
Ye called me—I have spoken once—I speak
No more ; make way there !—I must pass alone !

[Exit ISMENE.

THOAS (calling to ISMENE).

O ! mother, stay ! She's gone. [Sinks into his chair.

IPHITUS.

Her word decides,
Unless the gods disown it. Peace ! the altar

Is silent; the last moment presses on us—
Hyllus, the doom'd, stand forth!

CREUSA.

O pause; to thee,
Thoas, I call; thou know'st him guiltless.

IPHITUS.

Hold!

No mortal passion can have utterance here,
When Fate is audible. To yield is ours:
Be calm as Hyllus, or forego his hand.

[CREUSA sinks on her knees beside HYLLUS; IPHITUS lays one hand on the head of HYLLUS, and raises the other towards heaven.

IPHITUS.

Dread Power, that bade us to this fane, accept
The expiation.

THOAS.

Hold thy frantic hand—
Corinthians, save your Prince!—You are silent. Then
I turn to you, Athenians! Use your power,
Advance your swords, and teach the conquered justice.

[The Athenians draw their swords and advance.

IPHITUS.

Forbear!

THOAS.

Deliver up your prisoner to my charge;
Let me confer with him apart; my life
Shall answer if I do not give you his.

IPHITUS.

Corinthians, give the Athenian way; he speaks
With power not mortal. Truth is struggling to us.

[Exeunt all but THOAS and HYLLUS.

HYLLUS.

Thoas, thou wilt not let Creusa think
Her brother guilty?

THOAS.

O that for myself

I could implore like grace; but that I know
Thou must not grant; I have another suit
For that which thou canst give.

HYLLUS.

What boon can I

In these my number'd moments grant to thee?
What wouldest thou ask? Oblivion? Well thou know'st
I have not power.

THOAS.

Yes; in the boon I ask,
That blessing is included; 'tis a thing
Which I must shortly taste, a thing I sigh for,
But it will have no sweetness and no worth,
Unless it come from thee.

HYLLUS.

What is it?

THOAS.

Death.

HYLLUS.

I know that one of us must die. The lot
Has fallen on me; and it is best. My life
Is that of a slight stripling; thine is rich
In promises of greatness.

THOAS.

No; most worthless—
For it is tainted. Had my soul been base

By nature, I might seek a soldier's fortune
 Still in the field; but noble as it was,
 It shivers at the shadow of its crime,
 And shuts itself from this world;—in another

[He plucks the knife from his bosom.]

It may expand unsoil'd. Behold this steel,
 Which thy brave kindness left me; it was red
 From the paternal fountain whence thou drew
 The blood that circles in thy veins; receive it,
 And sheath it here! [kneels] The gods require a life
 For his, and mine alone can justly pay
 The forfeit.

HYLLUS.

Mine will satisfy.

THOAS.

No, Hyllus;
 So paid, 'twill bring upon thy native Corinth
 A double curse; for there is none so deadly
 As that of guiltless blood, poured out by men
 In the great name of justice. Think, O think,
 What torture will be mine, when pestilence
 Lays waste thy city; when Creusa calls
 On her slain brother, and the burning truth
 Lives ever in my spirit; O, be just!
 Be merciful, and send the dagger home!

HYLLUS.

I may not stain Jove's temple with thy blood.

THOAS (rising).

Thou art right. There is a fitter spot for justice;
 Come with me to the grove, in whose recess
 Thy father's ashes are inurn'd; where still

His shade is waiting unavenged, and calls
His son to his great duty.

HYLLUS.

I will go.

THOAS.

'Tis well. Now may I grasp thy hand again,
And taste thy generous friendship ; for I feel
The stain of blood already passing from me,
As though the sacrifice were past. May'st thou
And she, whom thou wilt cherish with such love
As brothers rarely know, live happy !

HYLLUS.

Never ! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The outside of the Funereal Grove.

Enter two Corinthian Soldiers.

FIRST CORINTHIAN SOLDIER.

Comrade, hast thou heard tidings from the temple ?

SECOND CORINTHIAN SOLDIER.

None since the crowd withdrew from it and left
The prince and the Athenian leader there ;
But these may tell us more.

Enter two Athenian Soldiers.

FIRST CORINTHIAN SOLDIER.

Can you instruct us
How the strange conference, between our prince
And him who led you, ended ?

FIRST ATHENIAN SOLDIER.

They have left

The fane together, and have bent their way
To the thick grove which holds the urn of Creon ;
Take heed no evil happen to our chief,
Or we will make a wilderness of Corinth.

FIRST CORINTHIAN SOLDIER.

This is the grove. They must have enter'd it
On the western side. Ye need not fear—the prince
Was without arms, and Thoas, in the might
Of corporal strength, o'ermatches him. Hast heard
Aught of the queen ?

SECOND CORINTHIAN SOLDIER.

Here comes the priest.

Enter IPHITUS.

Dost know
Whither the queen hath wander'd ?

IPHITUS.

From the fane
Where she in wildest mood denounc'd a youth
Whom I believe most innocent, she pac'd
The city, with a step so firm and brow
So resolute, that none dar'd stay her course
By deed or question. To the mournful glen,
Which, if hush'd rumours are believ'd, she lov'd
Strangely to linger in, she bent her way !
Its depth was clear,—the poisonous vapour slept
Within its frightful home ; from a tall crag,
Whence none could stop her, I beheld her pass
To the detested cavern ; at its entrance
She paused an instant, cast a mournful look

Upon the sun just setting, toss'd her arms
 Wildly towards heaven, then drew them to her breast,
 In act as if she press'd an infant there ;
 And, as her eye, uplifted, caught a glimpse
 Of those who might prevent her, backward drew
 Into the cave, whence deadly vapours wreath'd
 Her form grown spectral. So she sunk in gloom,
 Where none dare ever tread to seek for that
 Which was Ismene !

Enter CREUSA.

CREUSA.

Where is Hyllus ? where
 The Athenian chief ? I hear they left the fane
 Together—they are gone to mortal conflict,—
 I'm sure on't.—Iphitus, thou art Jove's priest ;
 Fly with me, and prevent them ! [A groan from the wood.
 Heard ye that ?
 It is too late for succour. I will go,
 Though sights of horror blast me !

IPHITUS.

Lady, thou

Wilt be distracted.

CREUSA.

No ; there is no refuge
 In madness for a wretchedness like mine !
 Away ! away ! Hold back,—I pass alone.

IPHITUS.

Let's follow.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The interior of the Funereal Grove. The Urn of Creon. The Knife bloody on its Pedestal. On one side Thoas wounded; on the other, Hyllus, with face averted, and covered with his hands.

THOAS.

I bless thee! do not mourn; it was well done—
Speak kindly of me as thou canst, to her—
Thy sister.

Enter Pentheus and Athenian Soldiers.

PENTHEUS.

Have I come too late?

THOAS.

No, Pentheus,

In happy time.

PENTHEUS.

Alas! but to avenge thee.

THOAS.

Friend, I leave nothing to avenge; this death
Was yielded to my prayer. Thou may'st guess well
Why I have courted it. My brief command
Will now devolve on thee; but I would make
A treaty with this youth, whom I now hail
As King of Corinth. 'Twill be short, but sealed
With blood:—that the Athenian troops retire,
Laden with the rich spoils they have achiev'd,
And leave his reign in peace. Wilt thou consent?

[To Hyllus.

HYLLUS.

Whate'er thou wilt.

THOAS.

And, Pentheus, thou wilt see
 Our part fulfilled ?

PENTHEUS.

Thy wish shall be obeyed.

Enter CREUSA, followed by IPHITUS, and others.

CREUSA.

Ha ! Thoas wounded ! first and only love !
 O, cruel, cruel brother ! never more
 Be called by that dear title.

THOAS.

Hold, Creusa,

I will not purchase a last ecstacy
 By such disunion. Hear me ! and Corinthians,
 Attend the dying words of him who slew
 Your king ;—with what excuse of circumstance
 You will hereafter gather from the prince,
 Whose noble tongue will speak too gently of me.
 Pentheus, thy hand ; convey me to my birthplace ;
 Her glories dawn upon me now, more clear
 Than I have ever seen them in the dreams
 Which have enrich'd my little life ! O, Athens !

[Dies.]

HYLLUS.

Sister !

CREUSA.

Forgive me, brother.

[She falls on his breast and bursts into tears.

HYLLUS.

Weep there; 'tis thy home.

Fate, which has stricken us so young, leave this—
That we shall cleave together to the grave.

The curtain falls.

GLENCOE ;
OR,
THE FATE OF THE MACDONALDS.
A TRAGEDY, IN FIVE ACTS.

FIRST REPRESENTED, MAY 23, 1840.

TO

LORD JEFFREY,

WITH GRATEFUL SENSE OF HIS KINDNESS, AND PRIDE IN HIS ESTEEM,

THIS TRAGEDY,

EMBODYING THE FEELINGS OF HAPPY DAYS,

SPENT IN THAT ROMANTIC LAND WHICH HIS DELIGHTFUL SOCIETY HAS ENDEARED,

IS (WITH HIS PERMISSION)

RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED.

PREFACE.

IT seems strange that the terrible incident, which deepens the impression made on all tourists by the most awful pass of the Highlands, should not have been long ago made the subject of poetry or romance. Although the massacre which casts so deep a stain on the government of King William the Third, may well have been regarded as too shocking for dramatic effect, unless presented merely in the remote back-ground of scenic action, it is surely matter of surprise that it should not have been selected as a subject for Scottish romance, by the great Novelist who has held up its authors to just execration in his "History of Scotland." A deed so atrocious, perpetrated towards the close of the seventeenth century, under the sanction of a warrant, both superscribed and subscribed by the king, is an instance of that projection of the savage state into a period of growing civilisation which enables the novelist to blend the familiar with the fearful—"new manners" with "the pomp of elder days"—the fading superstition of antiquity with the realities which history verifies. To him, the treachery by which it was preceded—the mixture of ferocity and craft by which it was planned and executed—the fearful contrast between the gay reciprocation of social kindness, and the deadly purpose of the guests marking out their hosts for slaughter—present opportunities for interesting detail which is not within the province of the dramatist. The catastrophe has also a far-reaching interest, as showing the extermination of one of the most sturdy and united, although one of the smallest, of the Highland clans ; for, being the most fearful of the series of measures by which the little sovereinties of the Highland Chiefs were abolished, it may well represent their general extinction, and the transfer of the virtues and the violence they sheltered from action to memory. It occurred in a scene, too, which, for gloomy grandeur, is not only unequalled, but unapproached—perhaps, unresembled—by any other pass in Britain ; and its solemn features, especially when contemplated beneath heavy clouds and amidst rolling mists, harmonise with the story of the horrors which were wrought among them. Considering, therefore, the delight which Sir Walter Scott felt in animating the noblest scenery of his country with its most romantic traditions, it is difficult to account for his abstinence from a theme which, if adopted by him, would have been for ever sacred from the touch of others.*

In the endeavour to present, in a dramatic form, the

* Two passages only, as far as the author is aware, in the poetry and fiction of Sir Walter Scott, contain allusions to the massacre at Glencoe; but they show how intensely he felt the atrocities committed under the apparent sanction, at least, of the government of King William. The following stanzas are quoted by himself from his own poems, in a note to his History :—

“The hand that mingled in the meal,
At midnight drew the felon steel,
And gave the host’s kind breast to feel
 Meed for his hospitality!
The friendly hearth which warm’d that hand,
At midnight arm’d it with the brand
That bade destruction’s flames expand
 Their red and fearful blazonry.

“Then woman’s shriek was heard in vain;
Nor infancy’s unpitied pain,
More than the warrior’s groan, could gain
 Respite from ruthless butchery.

feelings which the scene and its history have engendered, it has been found necessary to place in the foreground domestic incidents and fictitious characters ; only to exhibit the chief agents of the treachery, so far as essential to the progress of the action ; and to allow the catastrophe itself rather to be felt as affecting the fortunes of an individual family, than exhibited in its extended horrors. The subject presents strong temptations to mere melodramatic effect : it has been the wish of the author to resist these as much as possible ; but he can scarcely hope with entire success.

In the outline of those incidents which are historical, the author has not ventured on any material deviation from the story, as related in the Fifty-eighth Chapter of Sir Walter Scott's "History of Scotland," where it will be found developed with all the vividness of that master-spirit of narrative.* The rash irresolution of Mac Ian, in deferring his submission till the last moment ; his journey to Fort-William in the snow-storm ; his disappointment

The winter wind that whistled shrill,
The snows that night that cloak'd the hill,
Though wild and pitiless, had still
Far more than Southron clemency."

The following passage occurs in the tale of the "Highland Widow," in Elspat's remonstrance to her son on his enlistment :—" Go, put your head under the belt of one of the race of Dermid, whose children murdered—yea, she added with a wild shriek, 'murdered your mother's fathers in their peaceful dwellings in Glencoe ! Yes !' she again exclaimed, with a wilder and shriller scream, ' I was then unborn, but my mother has told me ; and I attended to the voice of my mother ;—well I remember her words !—They came in peace, and were received in friendship ; and blood and fire arose, and screams and murder !'

" 'Mother,' answered Hamish, mournfully, but with a decided tone, ' all that I have thought over—there is not a drop of the blood of Glencoe on the noble hand of Barcaldine ;—with the unhappy house of Glenlyon the curse remains, and on them God hath avenged it.' " in finding he had sought the wrong officer ; his turning thence, and passing near his own house, to Inverary, where he arrived after the appointed day ; the acceptance of his oath by the sheriff of Argyle, and his return to enforce the allegiance of his clan to King William ; the arrival of Glenlyon and his soldiers in the glen ; their entertainment for fifteen days by the Macdonalds ; the hypocrisy by which they veiled their purpose when urged to its execution by Major Duncanson ; and the partial execution of the murderous orders ; are all real features of “an ower true tale.” The only deviations of which the author is conscious, are, the representing Alaster Macdonald, the younger son of Mac Ian, as a lad, instead of the husband of Glenlyon’s niece ; and that niece as fostered by the widow and son of a chief of the clan, once the rival of Mac Ian ; and in substituting, for the foul traits of treachery which Sir Walter Scott imputes to Glenlyon, the incident of his procuring a young officer in his own regiment, but of the clan of the Macdonalds, to place the soldiers in the tracks leading from the valley they were commanded to surround. The character of Halbert Macdonald, and the incidents of his story, are entirely fictitious.

* By the obliging permission of the late Mr. Cadell, expressing the feelings of Sir Walter Scott's family, I enrich the Appendix to this volume with the chief part of this stirring tale.

As the chief interest which the author can hope that any will find in perusing this drama, will consist in its bringing to their minds the features of the stupendous glen to which it refers, he may be permitted to state, that the spot where the tower and chapel of Halbert are supposed to be placed, is beneath the summit of the great mountain Bedin ; towards which a huge gully leads, or seems to lead, from the bed of the river, and where, enclosed amidst the black rocks, in the darkness of which that gully is lost, far above the glen may be the site of such a rude dwelling. The house of Mac Ian is supposed to be—where, no doubt, it was—in the lower and wider part of the glen, where, by the side of the Cona, the wild myrtle grows in great profusion, about two miles to the south-east of Loch Leven. In other respects, as far as vivid impressions, frequently renewed, have enabled the author, he has endeavoured to recal to the recollection of those who have visited Glencoe the subsisting features of its scenery ; although he cannot place implicit confidence in those impressions, when he finds a writer like Pennant asserting of the glen, that "its mountains rise on each side perpendicularly to a great height from a flat narrow bottom ; so that, in many places, they seem to hang over, and make approaches as they aspire towards each other." To his memory, Glencoe seems not a narrow defile, as this description would import, but a huge valley between mountains of rock, receding from each other till a field of air of several miles' breadth lies between their summits : of which, the last time he saw it, three young eagles, rising from the coarse heather at the head of the pass, near King's-house, took and kept delighted possession.

PERSONS OF THE DRAMA.

MAC IAN, Chief of the Clan of the Macdonalds of Glencoe.

JOHN MACDONALD, eldest Son of Mac Ian.

ALASTER MACDONALD, youngest Son of Mac Ian—a youth.

HALBERT MACDONALD, Nephew of Mac Ian—Son of a deceased Chief.

HENRY MACDONALD, younger Brother of Halbert.

ANGUS, } Old Men of the Clan of the Macdonalds of Glencoe.
DONALD, }

CAPT. ROBERT CAMPBELL of Glenlyon, commonly called GLENLYON,
Captain of a detachment of the Earl of Argyle's Regiment.

LINDSAY, an Officer under Glenlyon's command.

DRUMMOND, a Sergeant in the Regiment.

KENNETH, an old Servant of Mac Ian.

A Catholic Priest.

LADY MACDONALD, Mother of Halbert and Henry.

HELEN CAMPBELL, an Orphan protected by Lady Macdonald, Niece to Glenlyon.

Clansmen, Officers, Soldiers, &c.

SCENE—Glencoe, and the neighbouring banks of Loch Leven.

TIME—January, 1689.

The first Two Acts occupy one night and the following morning. There is an interval of a fortnight between the action of the Second and Third Acts:—the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Acts comprise the action of the three succeeding days.

GLENCOE;

OR,

THE FATE OF THE MACDONALDS.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Hall in the House of Mac Ian in Glencoe.—Midnight.—A turf fire burning.—Storm heard without.—JOHN MACDONALD discovered sitting pensively at a table; ALASTER pacing the room.

JOHN.

LET me entreat you, Alaster, to sleep ;
Three nights of feverish waking, at your age,
May spoil you for a watchman ; for your nerves,
Undisciplined by care, throb many hours,
While those of elder and sedater spirits,
Ruled by the time, count one. Rest those slight limbs
On yonder couch of heather ;—I would pledge
My word to rouse you at the first faint tread
Which may announce your father, but 'twere needless ;
In deepest slumber it will stir your heart,
And rouse you to his arms.

ALASTER.

How can I sleep?

How can you wish that I should sleep, when night
 Succeeds to night, and still the unconquer'd wind,
 Laden with snow and hailstones, dashes round us,
 As if in scorn of Highlanders, content
 To yield the fastnesses in which it held
 Joint empire with our sires; and still the fear
 That it has dealt its vengeance on the head
 We love increases,—with the time o'erpast
 For sad and shameful travel?

JOHN.

Alaster,

I must not hear you blend those words with aught
 Our sire resolved. You did not guess the war
 Of fierce emotions that, within his frame
 Unshaken, raged, as time brought nigh the hour
 When he must plight his faith to England's king,
 Or to the power of unrelenting foes
 Yield up his clansmen. While the sky was clear,
 With wavering purpose he inclined to wait
 His doom at home; but when the snow-storm hurl'd
 Its icy arrows through the hills, the woes
 Of roofless desolation all would share
 Shriek'd at his heart, and peril lent a show
 Of honour to the journey, which had else
 Seem'd shameful;—so he girt him to the task
 As to a doom'd man's office. If we lose
 All else, we will preserve our household laws;
 Nor let the licence of these fickle times
 Subvert the holy shelter which command

Of fathers, and undoubting faith of sons,
Rear'd for our shivering virtues. You o'erstep
The province of a Highland chieftain's son ;
You must not judge your father.

ALASTER.

It is true,

And I submit me to your chiding : still
'Tis hard to own new tyranny ; to shrink
Before its threats ; to feel the Highland heart
Shrivel and die within my frame, nor strike
One blow for ancient sovereignty and honour.

JOHN.

I grant that it is hard ; but if the blow
Be without hope, 'tis nobler to forbear,
Nor buy a glorious moment with the blood
Of trusting clansmen. Would you know what virtue
Endurance may possess, when action fails,
Look at our cousin Halbert !—To your eye,
Whose memory reaches not his fiery boyhood,
He seems distinguish'd only by that charm
Of courtesy which hearted kindness sheds
Through simplest manners, and an aspect grave
Which these huge rocks impress upon the port
Of him who loves them. You have often seen
Our father to his greeting make return
Of scoff or withering silence, which he bears
In gentlest mood ;—yet once his soul was passion'd
With wilder rage than even your ardent youth
Can guess ; but I err now ; for I o'erstep
An old injunction not to tell his story,
Till manhood fitted you to hear it.

ALASTER.Manhood !*JOHN.

I did not mean to ruffle you. Your years,
Though few, have been instructed by distress,
And I admit your title to the cares
And knowledge happier fortunes had deferr'd.
Sit, then, and listen. Halbert's father once
With ours contested who might claim descent
From eldest line of ancestry, and right
To chieftainship and lands. Fierce conflicts held
The claim in doubt, till old Macdonald fell
Stricken for death ;—then, conscious that his sons,
Halbert, the eldest-born, about your age,
And Henry, a slight stripling, scarcely twelve,
Could ill sustain the quarrel, or protect
Their mother in her sorrow, sent the priest
Who shrived him, to entreat his rival's hand
In peace,—with offer to resign his claims,
So that the blacken'd tower in which he lay,
Its ruin'd chapel, the small niche of rock
In which they are embraced as in a chasm
Rent 'neath our loftiest peak by ancient storm,
And some scant pastures on Loch Leven's side,
Were ratified as Halbert's. To this pact
I was a witness, and the scene lives now
Before me.—In a room where flickering light
Strove through the narrow openings of huge walls,
On a low couch, Macdonald's massive form
Lay stretch'd ;—with folded arms our father stood
Awed by the weakness of the foe so late
His equal ; the expiring warrior raised

His head, and catching from the eager looks
Of the wan lady who had wiped the dew
Of anguish from his forehead, argument
To quell all scruple, solemnly rehearsed
The terms, and, as his dying prayer, implored
Halbert to keep them.

ALASTER.

So he yielded ?

JOHN.

No :

One flush of crimson from the hair which curl'd
Crisply around his brows, suffused his face
And throat outspread with rage ;—he slowly raised
His dirk ; and, though the agony which swell'd
His heaving breast prevented speech, we read
In his dilated nostril, eyes that flash'd
With fire that answer'd to the uplifted steel,
And lips wide-parted for the sounds which strove
In vain to reach their avenue, a vow
Of never-resting warfare ;—so he stood
Rigid as marble, of his mother's face
Turn'd on him from her knees—of the wild fear
Which struck his gamesome brother sad,—of all
Unconscious. While we waited for his words,
Another voice, from the deep shade that gloom'd
Beyond the death-bed, came ;—and midst it, stood
The squalid figure of a woman, wrought
Beyond the natural stature as she stretch'd
Her wither'd finger towards the youth, and spoke—“ Halbert, obey ! the hour which sees thee rule
O'er the Macdonalds of Glencoe shall bring

Dismay and death :"—then glided from the room.
 He did not start, but as his ears drank in
 The sounds, his colour vanish'd from his face ;
 The light forsook his eyes ; his nerveless hand
 Released the dirk ; he sank on trembling knees,
 Beside the couch, and with a child's soft voice
 Said, "I obey"—and bow'd his head to take
 His father's blessing, who fell back and died
 When he had murmur'd it. The youth arose
 Sedate, and, turning to his mother, said,
 "I live for you." Since then he has remain'd
 What you have known him.

ALASTER.

What was she who wrought
 This awful change ?

JOHN.

Have you not heard of Moina ?
 Although she has not since that day been seen
 Within our vale, her awful figure glared
 On the remotest infancy of men
 Who now are reckon'd old. Her age alone
 Would make the obscurest thread of human life
 Drawn out, though many births and deaths of hope,
 A thing to tremble at ;—'tis said she gazed
 On that best piece of heavenly workmanship—
 Our Mary's beauty, when the squalid queen
 Of England foully marr'd it ; some offence
 Or mighty sorrow now forgotten drew
 Her life into deep solitude. Preserved
 By her majestic bearing from the grasp
 Of law, she owns the power to pierce the veil

Of mortal vision ;—the sole tie she knows
 To this world is a kindred with our race,
 From which she sprung ;—yet only giant griefs
 Borne or foreshadow'd have the power to stir
 Her dull affections, or to invite her steps
 From the rude hovel where she dwells alone
 Far on the mountain plain, within the round
 Of stones which point death's ancient victories
 O'er nameless heroes. Whether earnest thought
 And long communion with the hills whose moan
 Foretells the tempest, taught her first to break
 The bondage of the present, or worse aid
 Hath given her might, I cannot tell ; pray Heaven
 That you may never cross her !

ALASTER.

Her strange words

Fell lightly on the younger son, whose acts
 Of boyish prowess wrought in frolic mood
 I once admired ;—has anything been heard
 Of that gay scapegrace ?

JOHN.

No ;—he could not brook
 The dullness of his home, though not uncheer'd
 By female charms ; for there the lovely child
 Of brave Hugh Campbell, whom Macdonald loved,
 Spite of the hatred that he bore his clan,
 Has, from the opening of her youth's first blossom,
 Found shelter ;—and no fairer Scotland boasts
 Than Helen Campbell. If young Henry lives,
 Be sure you'll find him on the sunny side
 Of fortune's favour.—Hark ! the Cona's roar !

It bursts the icy chains which long have held it,
And riots in wild freedom.

ALASTER.

"Twill destroy

The slender bridge below us. Should our father
Approach that way!—I will not linger thus.

JOHN.

He bade me wait him here. Ho! Kenneth! [calling]
Run!

Enter KENNETH.

Swift to the bridge, it may be yours to save
Your chief.

[Exit KENNETH.

His journey will not lie that way.
Yet horrors thicken round us. 'Mid the roar
Methinks I hear a step—it comes—alas!
'Tis not Mac Ian's.

Enter HALBERT MACDONALD.

Halbert, I have scarce
The power to bid you welcome as I ought;
We are sad watchers for our sire's return,
And almost blame the footsteps of a friend
Which might be his.

HALBERT.

I came to ask of him;—
For having cross'd him on Loch Leven's shore
Three nights ago, scarce two miles hence, I heard
With wonder the report which found its way
To our lone dwelling but to-night, that still
He was abroad.

ALASTER.

Are you assured 'twas he ?
Did he address you ?

HALBERT.

Alaster, you know
How rarely he will grace me with a word ;
But this is not a season for a thought,
Save of his peril. I had made my way,
Breasting the hurricane, in hope to lead
Our herd to shelter ere the night should add
Dark terrors to the storm : in blackening mist
I saw a mantle flicker ; then the hairs
Of a white head, which stream'd along the wave
Of flying vapour ; swift I ran to aid
Some aged wanderer's steps, and cried aloud.
He fled before me, till my fleeter limbs
O'ertook him ; then he faced me ;—'twas your father ;
A look, in which strong anguish baffled scorn,
He fix'd upon me ; waved his arm aloft,
In action that forbade pursuit, and took
The pathway to Loch Etive. I believed
He only wish'd to shun me, and that done,
He would turn homeward.

ALASTER.

If indeed 'twas he,
And not a spectral image of his mould :
He fears to meet the faces of his friends
After his oath to William.

HALBERT.

If he lives,
That oath is past ; and being past, dear cousin,

Let it not prompt a word which may add pangs
 To a brave spirit's shame. At earliest dawn
 I'll search each cavern'd nook within our glen,
 Nor leave a crevice which the smallest rill
 Has hollow'd, unexplored. I know them all ;
 So haply I may find the reverend chief
 Crouch'd in some narrow cave,—his stately head
 In resignation bow'd upon his staff,
 And waiting, without struggle, the last chill
 Of slowly freezing death ;—may lead him home,
 And win one cordial pressure of his hand,
 To speak he owns me true.

JOHN.

A footstep !—hush !

Enter ANGUS.

Angus at such an hour !

ANGUS.

A fearful summons
 From a shrill voice, between the tempest's gusts,
 Call'd me to meet my chief.

JOHN.

Would he were here !

He comes even now [listening]. No.

Enter DONALD.

This is terrible !

DONALD.

Is not Mc Ian here ? I came to meet him ;
 Roused from my bed by such a piercing cry
 As rarely syllables a human name !

JOHN.

You hear !

Other old Clansmen enter.

JOHN.

I ask not why you come : I know
Some mortal tidings linger on the storm,
And ye are met to share them. Let them come :
We can but die !

HALBERT.

Heaven fit us to endure !

JOHN.

Another step ; I know it well !—'tis his !
Pray you withdraw awhile ; but go not hence.

[HALBERT and the Clansmen retire to the end of the Room.

Enter MAC IAN.

MAC IAN.

Still watching ?—you too, Alaster ? What care
My absence must have brought you ! My dear sons,
Do not despise your father, who returns
The subject of King William.

JOHN.

All you do
Must have our reverence. Let me bring you wine.

MAC IAN.

No ; it would choke me. I must drain no more
The goblet to assuage the patriot glow
Of love and pride ; I may not drink to Him
Whose ancestry my own revered ; and wine
Were poison to me now.

ALASTER.

Is all then past ?

B

MAC IAN.

It is ; and sad as was the task, the way
 Was worthy of its end. When through deep snow
 I reach'd Fort-William, nerved to take the oath
 Before the General,—I was told his office
 Did not allow him to record it : thence
 I was compell'd to struggle through the storm
 To Inverary, where the sheriff deign'd,
 Although beyond the appointed time, to seal
 The degradation of our race. I pass'd
 Within two miles of this beloved home,
 And dared not turn to it.

HALBERT (speaking to ANGUS behind).

'Twas there I met him.

MAC IAN.

Who spoke ? Is he who track'd me in the storm
 Come as a spy, upon my sad return,
 To gaze upon my sorrow ? Let him face me !

HALBERT (coming forward).

I came not to offend you.

JOHN.

No ;—he came
 In terror for your safety.

MAC IAN.

Said he so ?

Nay, Halbert, look yourself ; scant powers are left
 To grace the seat you wait for, yet my son
 Shall fill it after me. Declare your wish
 To rend it from us ;—'twere a nobler course
 Than that you follow.

HALBERT.

Sir, you do me wrong ;
I boast no virtue when I claim content
With that which you have left me ;—would not change
My naked turret, in its mountain hold,
Reach'd by the path along whose rugged steeps
Discord and envy climb not, for the fields
Rich Inverary in its scornful groves
Embosoms ; and to me the mouldering walls
Of its small chapel wear the glory yet
Of consecration which they took from prayers
Of the first teachers, though a thousand storms
Have drench'd and shaken them. Forgive me, sir :
I have a patrimony which forbids
Envy of yours.

MAC IAN.

You hear—even now he taunts me ;—
Do you believe that show of meekness cheats
A soldier's eye ?—that we esteem your thoughts
Subdued to habits of a herdsman's life,
And all the passion and the pride of youth
Subdued to peace ?

HALBERT.

I strive to conquer them,
And not in vain. You think that strange ; if day
Illumed the glen, I'd show you, from your door,
A shapeless rock, which, thence observed, presents
No mark to give it preference o'er the mass
Of mountain ruin ;—yet from upward gaze
Of the slow traveller, as he drags his steps
Through yon dark pass, it shuts the mighty gorge
Above with all its buttresses ; its lake,

Black with huge shadows ; and its jagged heights,
 Which tempt the arrowy lightning from its track
 To sport with kindred terrors. So, by grace
 Of Heaven, each common object we regard
 With steadiness, can veil the dark abodes
 Of terrible remembrance at whose side
 Fierce passions slumber, and supply to hope
 The place of airiest pinnacles it shades.
 Thus, sir, it is with me.

JOHN.

Believe it, father ;

Indeed 'tis true.

MAC IAN.

Perhaps I do you wrong ;
 We'll speak of this to-morrow, when I meet
 The eldest clansmen, and with shame, enforce
 Their new allegiance.

JOHN.

They await you now.

MAC IAN.

Here ?—I must face them ;—tell them to approach.
 [MAC IAN takes his seat ;—JOHN beckons the old Clansmen, who surround it.]

I have cold welcome for you, friends ; you come
 To share the wreck of the Macdonalds. I,
 The most unhappy of the race, have journey'd
 To make the final sacrifice. I felt
 Resistance, with our deaths, would glut the hate
 Of Scottish minions bribed by England's gold ;
 And I have sworn——relate it for me, John,
 I cannot tell it !

JOHN.

To secure your lives
My father perill'd his ;—and yesternight,
At Inverary, pledged our faith to William.

Enter KENNETH wildly.

KENNETH.

Too late ! too late !

HALBERT.

What mean those awful words ?
Is all his anguish vain ?

KENNETH (seeing MAC IAN).

No, he is safe !

Why start ye ?—though the bridge is swept away,
Our chief's unharmed.

HALBERT.

And thus you welcome him,
With words which freeze the soul ! You meant no ill ;
Yet death is in your words.

KENNETH (kneeling to MAC IAN).

Forgive me.

MAC IAN.

Rise ;

I'm arm'd for any ill, unless it fall
On these, my life's last comforts.

[Looking on JOHN and ALASTER.

HALBERT.

Sir, farewell !

When peril comes—as come it will—regard
The meanest clansman's life less cheap than his
Whose loyalty you wrong.

[Exit HALBERT.

MAC IAN (to the Clansmen).

Good night, my friends.

[Ezeunt KENNETH and Clansmen.]

Come near me, children;—I can scarcely bear
To look into your faces. You forgive me?

JOHN.

Forgive! We honour and revere you. Bless us!

[JOHN and ALASTER kneel, one on each side of MAC IAN's chair. He lays his hands on their heads.]

MAC IAN.

There;—we are knotted now to live or die.

[The drop scene falls.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Hall of Halbert's Tower. Time—Daybreak.

Enter LADY MACDONALD with a Letter, followed by DRUMMOND, in the uniform of the Earl of Argyle's Regiment.

LADY MACDONALD.

Thanks for your pains. Let me devour again
The precious characters. [Reads.] “I come, dear mother,
Raised to high favour and command, to take
My quarters in your vale.” The morn's faint light
Had scarce enabled eyes less glad than mine
To read;—they are dazzled now. [To the Soldier.] Pray
you go in:
We have poor entertainment to bestow,
But our best cheer is yours.

DRUMMOND.

I must return
Upon the instant; shall I bear your answer?

LADY MACDONALD.

There is no need; he speeds; his eager wish,
If I may judge it by my own, will add
Wings to his swiftness. Yet a moment stay;
Know you the writer of these lines, my son,—
Is he of gallant port?

SOLDIER.

Our regiment's pride,
And first in favour of Glenlyon.

LADY MACDONALD.

Take
A happy mother's thanks. [Exit Soldier.
I shall behold
A hero whom I parted from a child;
Trace in his lineaments the hints which gave
Sure promise of his manhood; shall enjoy
In one rich hour the pleasures which are spread
Through years to her who watches the degrees
Of youth's expanding brightness. Where is Halbert?
Where Helen? She will laugh with wildest glee
To find her little playmate a plumed soldier,
And share his mirth. No gaiety like his
Has cheer'd her since he left us. She is here.

Enter HELEN CAMPBELL.

HELEN.

So early raised to meet the morning's frost?

LADY MACDONALD.

I feel no frost; the ecstacy within me
Clothes all without with summer; you shall share
In joy which seldom visits these old walls.

HELEN.

O say not so;—there's not a day but bears
Its blessing on its light. If nature doles
Her gifts with sparing hand, their rareness sheds
Endearments her most bounteous mood withholds
From greenest valleys. The pure rill which casts
Its thread of snow-like lustre o'er the rock,
Which seems to pierce the lowering sky, connects
The thoughts of earth with heaven, while mightier floods
Roar of dark passions. The rare sunbeam wins
For a most slight existence human care,
While it invests some marble heap with gleams
Of palaced visions. If the tufts of broom
Whence fancy weaves a chain of gold, appear,
On nearer visitation, thinly strewn,
Each looks a separate bower, and offers shade
To its own group of fairies. The prized harebell
Wastes not its dawning azure on a bank
Rough and confused with loveliness, but wears
The modest story of its gentle life
On leaves that love has tended; nay, the heath,
Which, slowly from a stinted root, unfolds
Pale lilac blossoms,—image of a maid
Rear'd tenderly in solitude,—is bless'd,
Instead of sharing with a million flowers
One radiant flush, in offering its faint bloom
To loving eyes. Say not again, dear lady,
That joy but seldom visits these old walls.

LADY MACDONALD.

Not while they shelter you, my lovely child ;
But new joy waits us ; you have not forgotten
Our careless Henry ?

HELEN.

No !—forgotten Henry !

But he has long forgotten us ; no message
Has told us of his welfare, since he found us
Too sad for his companions.

LADY MACDONALD.

Pardon in him,
As I do, young ambition's upward gaze,
Which, fix'd upon the future, cannot turn
To glance upon the distant and the past.

HELEN.

Is it indeed so, madam ?

LADY MACDONALD.

You are grave now—
You who are joyous in our weariest days.
Be glad ; for Henry will this day return
To charm us with his merriment.

HELEN.

To-day ?
Henry return to-day ! Speak once again
That blessed news !

LADY MACDONALD.

He comes to-day, upraised
In Argyle's regiment to command, and graced
With favour of Glenlyon.

HELEN.

Of my uncle?

Whom, never seen, I image a stern soldier
 Who, living to obey and to command,
 Allows no impulses but these which guide
 Along the rocky, strait, untinted channel,
 That discipline has hewn. If Henry wins
 Favour from him, he'll win the hearts of all.
 Comes he alone?

LADY MACDONALD.

His troop is quarter'd with us,
 To taste in peace our simple Highland fare,
 And feel our Highland welcome. But I long
 For Halbert's presence; though he does not love
 The clansmen of Argyle, he must rejoice
 In Henry's fortune.

HELEN.

He has not return'd
 Since, yestere'en, he left us to inquire
 The issue of Mac Ian's journey.

LADY MACDONALD.

You
 Alarm me;—not return'd?

HELEN.

Fear not for Halbert;
 You know he loves to wander at all hours,
 And, ever present to himself, will rule
 His course in safety. Is that he? The step
 Is hurried; yet it should be his.

Enter HALBERT, greatly agitated;—throws himself into a seat.

LADY MACDONALD.

My son,

What ails you? Speak!

HALBERT.

I will—soon—presently;

Ha! Mother! Helen! safe;—thank Heaven! Has nothing
To-night appall'd you?

LADY MACDONALD.

Nothing.

HALBERT.

That is strange.

LADY MACDONALD.

What has befallen us? Is Mac Ian dead?

HALBERT.

No; he survives; he has only lost the thing
Which makes life precious!—Ruin yawns for all—
Poor fated clansmen! I have heard again
Old Moina's voice.

LADY MACDONALD.

Her voice who spake when death—

HALBERT (laying his hand on her arm).

Mother!

LADY MACDONALD.

He shivers as with ague. Speak, my son!

HALBERT.

Yes—it is over now.—I'll tell you all,
As far as words can tell it. As I left

Mac Ian's door, and pierced the mist, which clung
 Around me like a shroud, that voice shriek'd forth
 Close at mine ear, "THE HOUR IS NIGH!"—Each cliff,
 Pillar, and cavern, echo'd back the words,
 Till they appear'd to fill the glen with sound,
 As floods from thousand streams might deluge it.
 'Twas no delusion ; surely as you hear
 My voice, I heard them.

LADY MACDONALD.

You have mused, my son,
 In dismal solitudes on ancient tales
 Till each wild pass is haunted, and the wind,
 Struggling within a mountain gully, moans
 Or shrieks with prophecy.

HALBERT.

No!—It transfix'd me
 As with an arrow,—when it sunk, still night
 Held its breath, waiting terrors ! 'Neath the moon
 Our three huge mountain bulwarks stood in light,
 Strange, solemn, spectral ;—not as if they tower'd
 Majestic into heaven, but hoar and bow'd
 Beneath the weight of centuries ; and each
 Sent forth a sound as of a giant's sigh :
 Then, from their feet the mists arising, grew
 To shapes resembling human, till I traced,
 Dimly reveal'd among the ghastly train,
 Familiar forms of living clansmen, dress'd
 In vestments of the tomb ;—they glided on,
 While strains of martial music from afar
 Mock'd their sad flight.—

[A distant band heard playing "The Campbells are coming."]

I hear that music now,—
The same—the same—Do you not hear it, Helen ?
Mother ?

HELEN.

I hear a lively strain which speaks
Approaching soldiers, who'll make winter bright,
And fill our vale with gladness.

HALBERT.

There is death
In those blithe sounds ;—I know them now ;—the tune
Which wakes the shallow heart of false Argyle,
Hollow and cruel ever.

HELEN.

Yet there's one
Who owns that clan, you would not spurn !

HALBERT.

Sweet girl !

Your beauty, early sever'd from its stem,
And planted in an honest soil, retains
No vestige of its origin. [The music is heard approaching,

Yet nearer !

Look not on me with those beseeching eyes ; [To HELEN.
I will enjoy it ; 'tis a gallant strain :
See, Helen, how you mould me ;—I can smile now.

HELEN.

And you shall smile ; while you have been entrall'd
By dismal fancies, we have heard sweet news
Of our long-sigh'd-for Henry.

HALBERT.

Of my brother ?

Shall we embrace him soon ?

HELEN.

We hope to-day.

HALBERT.

Then I will cast all sadness from my thoughts,
And own these portents idle ;—my fair brother,
Who in staid manhood made me feel a child,
While I instructed him with tiny arm
To brave the torrent to its whirling pool
O'er rocky ledge descending ! I am a boy
Again in thinking of it.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD in the dress of an officer of the Earl of Argyle's regiment ; HALBERT starts and stands apart ; LADY MACDONALD eagerly embraces HENRY.

LADY MACDONALD.

O, most welcome !

HALBERT (apart).

A soldier of Argyle ! a purchased slave
To his poor country's foes ! Would he had lain,
In all the glory of his youth, a corpse,
Or I had died first !

HELEN (laying her hand imploringly on HALBERT's).

Halbert, speak to him.

HALBERT.

Yes ;—I'll not dash that bonnet from his brow ;
Right, right—I'll speak to him. My brother !

[HENRY embraces HALBERT, who receives him coldly.

HENRY.

Stiff

And melancholy grown ! These rugged walls

Have shed their sullen gloom into your nature,
And made my welcome cold.

HALBERT.

These walls are sacred—
Fit home for honest poverty ; 'twere well
If you had never left them.

HENRY (approaching HELEN).

They contain
One form of radiant loveliness ;—is this
My some-time playmate Helen ? You are silent ;
You do not bid me welcome.

HELEN.

Welcome, Henry ?
It is because my heart's too full of welcome
To breathe its joy in words.

HALBERT (apart).

So fond ! so free !
This stripling will engage the care of all
Within my little world ;—for shame ! the thought
Is selfish and most base ; I must suppress it.— [Aloud.
You'll spend some time, I hope, in these poor walls,
And teach us to be gay ?

HENRY.

Our regiment mean
To teach your clan the finest of all lessons—
The art of spending life. We hope to raise
Strange echoes of delight among your mountains.
Let your old men prepare their choicest tales
Of ancient wars ; your lads their sinews brace
For noontide games and midnight dances ; bid

Your maidens' hearts be stout, for we shall lay
 Fair siege to some of them. Your mansion, brother,
 Will not be colder, if you'll deign to share
 A soldier's purse.

[HENRY offers a purse to HALBERT, who is about to dash it on the ground, but restrains his passion; pauses and returns it.
They speak apart from LADY MACDONALD and HELEN.

HALBERT.

Remove it from my sight,
 Lest it provoke my curse upon the gold,
 Which, having tempted Scotland's peers to sell
 Their country, pass'd through treacherous hands to yours.

HENRY.

Through treacherous hands ! I will not hear that said :
 Expend your spleen on me ; but speak a word
 Disgraceful to the officers I serve,
 And though my brother, you shall answer it.

HALBERT.

You make me smile now. I will answer it.
 I must have speedy speech with you, where none
 Shall break upon us.

HENRY.

At my earliest leisure.

[To LADY MACDONALD.] Mother, my duty calls me hence
 awhile,
 To hear my captain's orders. Helen, soon
 I shall reclaim old friendship.

[Apart to HALBERT.] In an hour,
 Upon Loch Leven's margin, in the shade
 Of the first rock, expect me.

HALBERT.

Do not fail. [Exit HENRY.

LADY MACDONALD.

Come, Helen, let us see the tower prepared
To feast our noble soldier and his friends.
Is he not all a mother's hope could image?

HELEN.

He is, he is ;—at first he scarcely knew me ;
Changed as he is, I had not mistaken him
Among a host of heroes !

[Exeunt HELEN and LADY MACDONALD.

HALBERT (alone).

Down, wild rage !

My rebel passions ought to fright me more
Than night's grim phantoms. I had deem'd my temper
Proof 'gainst all griefs, all injuries, all scorns ;
But this—my brother self-sold to our foes !—
I must be conqueror still. [Looks out.] O, blessed star
Of morning, do you wait upon that cone
Whose whiteness mocks our marble, to renew
The calm thy fields of azure can impart
To thoughts of earth's brief struggles ? Linger yet !
It sinks ; 'tis gone ; its peace is in my soul.

[Exit HALBERT.

SCENE II.—A Room in a Highland House in Glencoe.—Sentinels seen pacing before the Windows.—GLENLYON, LINDSAY, and other Officers of Argyle's Regiment.

GLENLYON.

These are rough quarters for the winter, friends ;
But let us make them jocund—find the huts
Which yield the warmest shelter from the snow,

And let our stores of wine and brandy pay
The courtesies we win. 'Tis easy service.

LINDSAY.

Is nothing more intended here than feasting?

GLENLYON.

Lindsay, I fain would hope not; we shall wait
For final orders. Now, our duty's plain—
To win the favour of our hosts;—if more
Should be commanded, 'twill be ours to do it.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

You know this glen, Macdonald: to your charge
I leave disposal of the soldiers; place them
Where frankest entertainment will be given.

HENRY.

The entertainment may be coarse, but given
With heartiest welcome. I shall grant a boon
To every clansman in whose hut I place
One of my gallant comrades.

GLENLYON.

See all lodged,
And then report to me. This hut be mine.

HENRY.

May I retire? I must redeem a pledge
Within this hour.

GLENLYON.

An old acquaintance found?

You have my leave, sir.

[Exit HENRY.

Some one knocks; attend;
Who waits?

Enter DRUMMOND.

DRUMMOND.

Mac Ian's sons are at the door,
And ask to see you.

GLENLYON.

Ha!—of course admit them.

[Exit DRUMMOND.

The children of the stubborn chief who dared
Accuse our loftiest nobles that they filch'd
The money sent to buy the peace of Scotland !
I'd thank him for a brawl. Your pleasure with me ?

Enter JOHN and ALASTER.

JOHN.

We bear Mac Ian's greeting to Glenlyon ;
He trusts you come in friendship, now his oath
To William is recorded.

GLENLYON.

How ! recorded ?

ALASTER.

Yes ; by the Sheriff of Argyle. We tell
The fact, not boast it.

GLENLYON.

You speak boldly, sir ;
A spirited young Highlander, i'faith :
Let me enlist you in our troop ; we teach
Some manners that you lack.

ALASTER.

And let me lack them,
Ere I endure your teaching.

JOHN.

Alaster!

Forbear.

GLENLYON.

O, let him speak. The oath is taken?

JOHN.

It is: though the appointed day had pass'd,
 Yet, as mere error and the storm produced
 The slight delay, it was forgiven.

GLENLYON.

Well!

Your father acted prudently at last:
 Within you'll taste some wine, and tell me how
 His journey prosper'd.

JOHN.

Sir, you have not made
 Reply to my sole question;—do you come
 To visit us in friendship?

GLENLYON.

Friendship? Surely—
 Fort-William's garrison, too small to hold
 Our regiment, sends us beggars to request
 Your hospitable greetings.

JOHN.

They are yours,
 And all our glen can offer shall attend them.

GLENLYON.

Your hand. [To ALASTER.] And yours;—you'll be a soldier yet. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Banks of Loch Leven.

Enter HENRY.

HENRY.

First at the place!—the morning's cold;—I wish
The quarrel were with other than the man
I wait for; but of all the useless things
Which form the business of the world, regret
Is the most idle. Yet, I wish 'twere past.—
He's here.

Enter HALBERT.

I have but little time to spend,
And the air freezes. Let's to work at once.
Select your ground, sir.

HALBERT.

Do you mock me, Henry,
With this vain show of courage?

HENRY.

I came hither
Upon your summons, as I thought, to end
A soldier's quarrel with a soldier's sword;
But if you can restrain the bitter speech
To which I must not listen, I prefer
To take your hand in kindness—As you will.

HALBERT.

Did I not feel that I have power to pierce
Through that cold bravery to the heart within it.

I might relieve you of some frolic blood
Which makes the front of your rebellion proud.

HENRY.

Rebellion !

HALBERT.

Have you not rebell'd at once
Against your clan, your country, and the tomb
Of a brave father who embraced in you
The darling of his age ? Behold his sword
You now defy,—your plaything while he talk'd
Of noble daring, till you paused from sport
To hear and weep. Its sight should wound you now
More than its edge could. What would be his grief
Could he behold you in that hated dress,
Link'd to the foes of Scotland ! O, my brother,
Why did you this ?

HENRY.

If you intend to ask
What urged me to take service with Argyle,
I answer you at once.—My eagle spirit,
Which wanted air to soar in ; frank disdain
Of dull existence, which had faintly gleam'd,
Like yonder Serpent-river, through dark rocks
Which bury it ; ambition for a lot
Which places life and death upon a cast,
And makes the loser glorious. Not for me
The sullen pride of mouldering battlements,
Or rites of tottering chapel.

HALBERT.

Is it so ?
Is ancient sanctity, which sheds its grace

Upon the infant's sportive hours, and cleaves
To the old warrior when he falls, a thing
To mock at? But I wrong you there: I know
Your heart then spoke not. I could cherish pride
In your gay valour, if a generous cause
Had won its aid;—nay, deeming Scotland lost,
If you had sought your fortune at the court
Of England, I had borne it;—but to join
With our domestic traitors—men who know
The rights they sell; who understand the ties
Which, through the waste of centuries, cement
Our clans, and give the sacred cord one life
Of reverential love; for whom these hills
On the clear mirror of their childhood cast
Great shadows; who have caught their martial rage
From deeds of Wallace and of Bruce, and learn'd
To temper and enrage it with the sense
Of suffering beauty, which from Mary's fate
Gleams through dim years; and who conspire to crush
These memories in men's souls, and call the void
They make there, freedom—is a deed to weep for!

HENBY.

I may not hear the comrades whom I love
Thus slander'd.

HALBERT.

You shall hear me while I speak
Of that which nearly touches you, as one
Of a small—branded—poor—illustrious race;
Who boast no fertile pastures; no broad lake
Studded with island woods, which make the soul
Effeminate with richness, like the scenes

In which the baffled Campbells hid their shame,
 And scorn'd their distant foes. Our boasts are few,
 Yet great :—a stream which thunders from its throne,
 As when its roar was mingled with the voice
 Of eldest song, from age to age retain'd
 In human hearts ;—wild myrtles which preserve
 Their hoard of perfume for the dying hour
 When rudeness crushes them ;—rocks which no flowers
 Of earth adorn, but, in themselves austere,
 Receive the beautiful direct from Heaven,
 Which forces them to wear it,—shows their tops
 Refined with air ; compels their darkest steeps
 Reluctant to reflect the noon tide sun
 In sheeted splendour—wreathes around them clouds
 In glorious retinue, which, while they float
 Slowly, or rest beneath the sable heights,
 In their brief fleecy loveliness grow proud
 To wait on the enduring.—And the right
 To walk this glen with head erect, you sold
 For bounties which Argyle could offer !

HENRY.

No—

Not for base lucre !—for a soldier's life,
 Whose virtue's faithful valour, unperplex'd
 With aught beyond the watchword. If your cause
 Were vital, I would freely draw my sword
 To serve it ; but where lives it ?

HALBERT.

In the soul

Which, ruffled by no hope to see it tower
 Again in this world, cherishes it still

In its own deathless and unsullied home ;—
 That soul which, swelling from the mould of one
 Obscure as I, can grasp the massive forms
 Of this great vale, and bend them to its use,
 Until their stateliest attributes invest
 With pillar'd majesty the freeborn thoughts
 Which shall survive them. Even these rocks confess
 Change and decay ; show where the ancient storm
 Rent their grey sides, and, from their iron hearts,
 Unriveted huge masses for its sport,
 And left their splinters to attest a power
 Greater than they ;—but mighty truths like those
 On which our slighted cause was based, shall hold
 Their seat in the clear spirit which disdains
 To sully or resign them, undisturb'd
 By change or death :—they are eternal, Henry !

HENRY.

If we were now the lords of this domain
 You love so well, I might have found a tie
 To bind me to your wishes ; you resign'd it ;
 What can these mountains yield to one who owns
 Mac Ian as their lord ?

HALBERT.

The power to bear
 That bitter taunt—which yet I feel !—O Henry !
 Was that well said ?

HENRY.

You should not have provoked it
 By slanders on my officers and friends.

HALBERT.

Your friends ! Poor youth ! companionship in mirth,

Ungraced by thought, makes shallow friends ; and yours
Are worse than shallow—they are false.

HENRY.

Nay, this

I will not bear ; draw, sir !

[HENRY draws his sword, and rushes on HALBERT, who dashes it from his hand.

HALBERT.

Take up your sword ;

See how a bad cause makes a brave arm weak !

Blush not ; you drew in pastime.

HENRY.

Kill me now,

And walk the hills in pride !

HALBERT.

I see too clearly

Our paths diverge ;—but let us not forget
That we have trod life's early way together,
Hand clasp'd in hand. How proud was I to watch
Your youngest darings, when I saw you dive
To the deep bottom of the lake beneath us,
Nor draw one breath till in delight you rose
To laugh above it ; when I traced the crags
By which with lightest footstep you approach'd
The eaglets' bed ; and when you slipp'd, yet knew
No paleness, bore you in my trembling arms
To yon black ridge, from which in the cold thaw
The snow-wreath melts, as infancy's pure thoughts
Have vanish'd from your soul.

HENRY.

No—Halbert—no !

Graceless I shook them from it, but they crowd
Here at your voice.

HALBERT.

So, you will not forget us?

Go, then, where fortune calls you, loved and praised—
Let not the ribald licence of a camp
Insult the griefs of Scotland; 'mid the brave
Be bravest; and when honours wait your grasp,
Allow a moment's absence to your heart
While it recalls one lonely tower, whose doors
Would open to you were you beggar'd, shamed,
Forsaken;—and beside whose once-loved hearth
Your praises shall awaken joy more fervent
Than nobler friends can guess at. Ah! you weep—
My own true brother still!

HENRY.

I am! I am! [They embrace.

Enter HELEN.

HELEN.

Forgive me that I follow'd you. I saw
Both ruffled at your parting; but my fears
Never suggested an event so sad,
As that two brothers, from whose swords alone
We hope protection, should direct their points
Against each other's lives.

HENRY.

You must not leave
This spot with the belief that Halbert shares
The blame of this encounter; mine the fault,
Be mine the shame.

HALBERT.

I will not let you pour
On Helen's ear one word of self-reproach;
You'll not believe him shamed?

HELEN.

Indeed I will not;
I feel that shame and Henry are disjoin'd
As yonder summits. [To HENRY.]

I must teach your steps
The pleasant pathways which we used to tread
In old sweet times. [Takes his hand.]

HALBERT (apart).

It cannot be she means
Other than sisterly regard in this;
'Tis but the frankness of a courteous heart.
No more—no more.

HELEN (to HALBERT).

Will you not walk with us?
I have a hand for you too.

HALBERT.

Nothing else?

HELEN.

Yes; and a heart—a grateful one. So solemn!
Nay, you must smile; this is a day of joy,
And shall be cloudless. Hark! the music calls us.
[Martial music at a distance.]

HALBERT.

Those strains again! Forgive me. Let us home.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III.*

SCENE I.—The Quarters of Glenlyon.

Enter GLENLYON and LINDSAY.

GLENLYON.

Are you not weary of your quarters, Lindsay?

LINDSAY.

Not I;—I care but little where I lodge.

GLENLYON.

These fifteen days among the snows will nerve
Our soldiers to encounter a campaign
In coldest winter. Do they bear it bravely?

LINDSAY.

Bear it? The rogues exult in it! Rude plenty
And loosen'd discipline make rich amends
For rations duly meted, and warm shelter,
The garrison affords. Our savage hosts
Have open'd their rock-cellard stores of ale,
And of the luscious juice from honey press'd,
Which the wild bee from scanty heather wins
To make us jocund; laughter and the dance
Have shaken many a hovel. May I ask
If we are destined long to dally thus?

GLENLYON.

I know not, Lindsay; what our mission was

* A fortnight is supposed to elapse between the Second and Third Acts.

You heard :—I scarcely dare remember it ;
 I, who have ever held my conduct true
 To orders, as my pistol to my touch,
 And feel these fastnesses are unsubdued
 While a fierce clan like this retains its show
 Of unity and ancient right, recoil
 From that which we may execute. But thus
 We must not loiter ; each repast, each cup,
 Each pressure of the hand, will make our work
 Harder and darker. I will send at once
 To Duncanson ; perchance Mac Ian's oath
 Accepted by the sheriff, though so late,
 May save him. There's a mournful courtesy
 In this old chief, crest-fall'n but self-sustain'd,
 Which urges me to wish it.

LINDSAY.

He is crafty,
 But yet most daring : never will the Highlands
 Know peace while he infests them.

GLENLYON (writing).

Wound not him
 With the sharp tongue on whom your sword may deal ;
 I will despatch Macdonald : can you tell
 Where I may find him ?

LINDSAY.

No : but I am sure
 He's pleasantly engaged ; for I have met him
 Often, since we have lodged here, with a lady
 Gracing his arm, whom a slight glance approves
 Of rarest beauty. But he comes to make
 His own report.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

GLENLYON.

"Tis well, sir, you have come ;
You have but seldom sought my orders here ;
And but that I am told you have fair plea
For such remissness, I might gravely note it.
At present I require to know the name
And station of the damsel who has drawn
So true an officer from duty.

HENRY.

Sir,

My home was in this glen, and I live here
Beneath my brother's roof.

GLENLYON.

Nay, no evasion ;
Tell me at once to whom I owe your absence,
Or hope no favour.

HENRY.

If I had not fear'd
The old estrangement which the father caused
Might touch the daughter, I had long ere this Sought for her your protection. She is the child
Of your slain brother, from your love so long
Unhappily divided.

GLENLYON.

I knew not
That he had left a daughter.

HENRY.

When he died,

You were abroad ; and she, an infant, found
A sire in mine.

GLENLYON.

Poor girl !—To find her here
At such a moment !—but she shall be cared for.

HENRY.

Cared for !

GLENLYON.

Yes—cared for ;—is my language strange ?
Is't strange that I should care for her ? To business :—
You are swift of foot, and know the jagged paths
Among these hills.

[Gives a letter.

Bear this to Duncanson,
And bring his answer with your best despatch :
When you return, we'll talk of my fair niece,
The partner of your rambles. I'll find means
To honour and reward you. Lindsay, come. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Halbert's Tower.

Enter LADY MACDONALD and HELEN.

LADY MACDONALD.

Helen, how grave you are ! While winter stretch'd
Its dull eventless length, your ready mirth
Lit the dark hours with gaiety, which else
Had been unvaried gloom. Now that our snows
Glitter with dancing feathers and bright plaids,
Our echoes learn to laugh, and our rough paths
Are cheer'd by tales of love, you droop and sigh !
Does any secret grief afflict my child ?

HELEN.

Grief, madam ! 'Tis the pensiveness of joy,
 Too deep for language, too serene for mirth,
 Makes me seem sad. To meet in manhood's bloom
 The gallant playmate of my childhood ; propp'd
 On the same arm to tread the same wild paths ;
 And in sweet fellowship of memories, feel
 Hour after hour of long-forgotten pleasure
 Start forth in sunny vividness and break
 The mist of heavy years,—is joy so hearted,
 That it can find no colour in the range
 Of gladness to express it ;—so accepts
 A solemn hue from grief.

LADY MACDONALD.

Have you then felt
 Those years so heavy, you have help'd to make
 So light to me ? Your lodging has been bleak,
 Your entertainment scanty ; yet your youth
 Has been so furnish'd with rich thoughts ; so raised
 To lofty contemplations ; that my pride
 In the bright valour of my younger son
 Cannot prevent my wonder that the hours
 In which my Halbert with delighted care
 Has minister'd to your soul's noblest thirsts,
 Should be thus soon forgotten.

HELEN.

Not forgotten,
 Nor have the years been heavy : if I said so
 I was most thankless. Pardon me, sweet lady,
 But when with Henry, I recal old times,
 I look across the intervening years

As a low vale in which fair pastures lie
 Unseen, to gaze upon a sunlit bank
 On which my childhood sported, and which grows
 Near as I watch it. If his nature seems
 Unsoften'd by reflexion,—like a rock
 Which draws no nurture from the rains, nor drinks
 The sunbeam in that lights it, yet sustains
 A plume of heather,—it is crown'd with grace
 Which wins the heart it shelters.

LADY MACDONALD.

My dear Halbert,
 How will you bear this !

HELEN.

Can it be, you fear
 My joy in Henry's presence should afflict
 A soul so great as Halbert's ?

LADY MACDONALD.

I do fear it ;—
 I know it ; shudder at it : can you doubt
 That Halbert loves you ?

HELEN.

Do not think it, madam,
 For mercy's sake, if you intend by love
 Something beyond a brother's fondest care
 For a lone sister ! You are silent ; turn
 Your face away ; your bosom throbs as grief
 Or terror shook it. Am I grown a curse
 To you—to him ? O whither shall I fly ?
 Where seek for counsel ? Dearest lady, save me !

[HELEN throws herself on LADY MACDONALD'S neck.

LADY MACDONALD.

Rest there, beloved fair one ; I will try
To temper this to Halbert ;—yet I fear—
He's bending towards us.

HELEN.

Hide me from his sight.
I cannot bear it now.

LADY MACDONALD (leading HELEN to the side).

That way ; I'll break
This sorrow to him, if I can ;—be calm. [Exit HELEN.

Enter HALBERT, from the opposite side.

HALBERT.

Was not that Helen ? Wherefore should she fly
Upon my coming ? But her absence serves
My purpose now. I came to talk of her.

LADY MACDONALD.

Of her ? Sit down ; you look fatigued and ill :
I'll fetch a draught of wine.

HALBERT.

Fatigued and ill !
My looks belie me, then ; I've scarcely felt
So fresh in spirit since I was a boy,
And the sweet theme I come to speak of needs
No wine to make it joyous. It is marriage.

LADY MACDONALD.

My son !

HALBERT.

Why, you look pale ; I thought my wish
Was also yours. I know a common mother,

Who, having lost her husband in her prime,
 Seeks from a grateful son some slight return
 For love that watch'd his infancy, may feel
 Her fortune cruel, when a new regard,
 With all the greediness of passion, fills
 The bosom where till then affection reign'd,
 Which answer'd, though it could not rival, hers :
 But we have lived so long as equal friends
 With love absorbing duty, that I thought,
 And I still think, increase of joy to me
 Must bring delight to you. I could have lived
 Content, as we have lived, and still prolong
 The lingering ecstasy of fearless hope,
 But that the licence of the time, which brings
 A band of loose companions to our glen,
 Requires that I should claim a husband's right
 To shield its lovely orphan.

LADY MACDONALD.

You mean—Helen ?

HALBERT.

Whom else could I intend ? If you have been Perplex'd by fear that I might mean to seek
 Another's hand, no wonder you grew pale.
 But still you tremble ;—what is this ?

LADY MACDONALD.

My son,

Are you assured she loves you ?

HALBERT.

As assured
 As of my love for her. In both, one wish,

As she has glided into womanhood,
Has grown with equal progress.

LADY MACDONALD.

Have you sought
Of her, if she esteems it thus ?

HALBERT.

By words ?

No ; for I never doubted it : as soon
Should I have asked you if a mother's love
Watch'd o'er my nature's frailties. If bright hopes
Dawning at once on each ; if gentle strifes
To be the yielder of each little joy
Which chance provided ; if her looks upraised
In tearful thankfulness for each small boon,
Which, trivial to the giver, seem'd excess
To her ; if poverty endured for years
Together in this valley,—do not breathe
Of mutual love, I have no stronger proofs
To warrant my assurance. Mother, speak !
Do you know anything which shows all this
A baseless dream ?

LADY MACDONALD.

My Halbert, you have quell'd
Fierce passion by strong virtue ;—use your strength—
Nay, do not start thus ; I do not affirm
With certainty you are deceived, but tremble
Lest the expressions of a thankful heart
And gracious disposition should assume
A colour they possess not, to an eye
Bent fondly over them.

HALBERT.

It cannot be;
 A thousand, and a thousand times, I've read
 Her inmost soul ; and you that rack me thus
 With doubt have read it with me. Before Heaven,
 I summon you to witness ! In the gloom
 Of winter's dismal evening, while I strove
 To melt the icy burthen of the hours
 By knightly stories, and rehearsed the fate
 Of some high maiden's passion, self-sustain'd
 Through years of solitary hope, or crown'd
 In death with triumph, have you not observed,
 As fading embers threw a sudden gleam
 Upon her beauty, that its gaze was fix'd
 On the rapt speaker, with a force that told
 How she could lavish such a love on him ?

LADY MACDONALD.

I have ; and then I fancied that she loved you.

HALBERT.

Fancied ! Good mother, is that emptiest sound
 The comfort that you offer ? Is my heart
 Fit sport for fancy ? Fancied !—'twas as clear
 As it were written in the book of truth
 By a celestial penman ! Answer me,
 Once more ! When hurricanes have rock'd these walls,
 And dash'd upon our wondering ears the roar
 Of the far sea, exulting that its wastes
 Were populous with death-pangs ;—as my arms
 Enfolding each, grew tighter with the sense
 Of feebleness to save ;—have you not known
 Her looks, beyond the power of language, speak

In resolute content, how sweet it were
To die so link'd together?

LADY MACDONALD.

I have mark'd it.

HALBERT.

Then wherefore do you torture me with doubt?
What can you know, what guess, that you can weigh Against these proofs?

LADY MACDONALD.

Be firm; she loves another.

HALBERT.

'Tis false!—and yet, great Heaven! your quivering lips
Attest it. And you knew this? You partook
Her counsels—His!—Yes, his!—you know the name
Which I must curse—of him I must pursue
Through deserts and through cities till I search
His bosom with my sword. Tell me the name—
Now—now—delay not.

LADY MACDONALD (laying her hand on his arm).

Halbert, pause, and look
Into your mother's face, and then reply
To her:—does she deserve this of her son?

HALBERT.

I am a thankless wretch to use command
Where I should humbly sue.—Sit, sit, dear mother,
Assume your old authority.

[Wildly places her in a chair and falls on his knees beside it.

I kneel

There—meekly as you taught me—when you raised

For the first time my little hands to God;
 A child, obedient and infirm as then,
 I do implore you, tell your wretched son
 What he must suffer.

LADY MACDONALD.

Are you arm'd to bear it?

HALBERT.

For all things.

LADY MACDONALD.

Henry—

HALBERT (starting up).

My own brother! Now
 I see it clear;—remember how she gazed
 With fondness on him, when he came array'd
 In a slave's livery; how she seized his hand
 When I had dash'd the insulting weapon from it,
 Aim'd at my life. Would I had slain him there!

LADY MACDONALD.

What fearful vision crosses you? Slay Henry—
 Him whom you moulded! From too thoughtless youth
 Strike him to all that death reveals, and bid
 Your twice-stabb'd mother gaze upon her sons—
 The murder'd and the guilty!

HALBERT.

Guilty?—yes!

I am—I thought it—felt as if my arm
 Could act it;—utter'd it. Look not upon me!
 Earth hide me!—cover me!

[Sinks into a seat and covers his face with his hands.

LADY MACDONALD.

I fear'd this outbreak
Of fire subdued, not quench'd. My noble son,
As you have fought with fiendish thoughts, and quell'd them,
Be victor now!

HALBERT (rising).

Are you assured she loves him ?
It may be but a girlish dream,—her eye
Enchanted for a moment by the grace
Of youth—her fancy dazzled by the show
Of military prowess,—while her soul
In its serene and inmost temple waits
Untouch'd and true. 'Tis so.

LADY MACDONALD.

Would that it were !

HALBERT.

I will awake her spirit from its trance ;
I'll meet her face to face, and soul to soul,
And so be satisfied.

LADY MACDONALD.

You shall do so,
If you will rule your passion.

HALBERT.

I am calm ;
Docile as infancy ; I'll seek her now.

LADY MACDONALD.

No ;—I will bring her on the instant. Think
That she has not a refuge in the world
Except in our protecting care, and feel

How gently she should be entreated ! Rage
From you would kill her.

HALBERT.

Rage—to her ? All weak
In passion as I am, you need not fear it.

LADY MACDONALD.

I'll trust you.

[Exit LADY MACDONALD.

HALBERT (alone).

She will come with her sweet voice
To charm away this mist. Alas ! I'm rude
And sad ; Henry is gay and quick of spirit,
And light of heart. Why did I let them roam
So often ? Yet it cannot be ; her heart
Could not be caught by gauds ;—so pure ; so arm'd—
So true !

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

HENRY.

What, musing ! Let me not disturb
Deep meditations. Is my mother near,
Or Helen ?

HALBERT.

Helen !

HENRY.

I have scarce a word
To spend with either ; though I would not pass
Your tower unvisited ; I'm bound to speed,
For I am bearer of an urgent letter
To Duncanson.

HALBERT.

To Duncanson ? The foe
Most bitter to our clan ;—and you dare bring it

Here ;—to your father's hall—where you were train'd
 To clansman's duty ;—which you left in scorn
 And now revisit in a lackey's guise
 To boast a cursed mission ; yield it to me,
 Traitor and slave ! or I will tear it from you.

HENRY.

Stand off !—what frenzy rules you ? Let me pass.

HALBERT.

There's treachery in it—and in you.

Enter LADY MACDONALD and HELEN.

LADY MACDONALD.

Your word !

[HALBERT, at sight of HELEN, pauses and shrinks back.

HALBERT (to HENRY).

Forgive me ; I am ill at ease, and hardly Know what I utter.

HENRY.

I shall think of this
 But as brain-sickness which long study brings,
 Heaven keep me from it ! I must not remain
 A moment more :—farewell ;—I shall return
 This way to-morrow, and shall hope to find
 Our grave philosopher in happier mood. [Exit HENRY.

LADY MACDONALD.

I leave you ; recollect your word.

HALBERT.

I will.

[Exit LADY MACDONALD.

Be not alarm'd, sweet Helen ; if your looks,
 Turn'd gently on me, had not power to still

The tempest my frail nature has endured,
 The issue of this moment would command
 All passion to deep silence, while I ask—
 If my scathed life enrich'd by yours may spread
 Its branches in the sunshine, or must shrink
 In withering solitude, a sapless thing,
 Till welcome death shall break it ?

HELEN.

Do not think

Your noble nature can require a reed
 So weak as mine to prop it : virtue's power,
 Which shields it as a breastplate, will not yield
 To transient sorrow which a thankless girl
 Can hurl against it.

HALBERT.

Little do you guess

The heart you praise : 'tis true, among the rocks
 I sought for constancy, and day by day
 It grew ; but then within its hardening frame
 One exquisite affection took its root,
 And strengthened in its marble ;—if you tear
 That living plant, with thousand fibres, thence,
 You break up all ;—my struggles are in vain,
 And my life's shatter'd.

HELEN.

What a lot is mine !

I, who would rather perish than requite
 Long years of kindness with one throb of pain,
 Must make that soul a wreck !

HALBERT.

No, Helen, no—

This is a dream ; your heart is mine ; mine only,—
I'll read it here :—you have not pledged its faith
To—— any other ?

HELEN.

No ; not yet.

HALBERT.

Thank God !—

Then you are mine ; we have been betrothed for years.

HELEN.

Would it had been so !

HALBERT.

You desire it ?

HELEN.

Yes ;

I then had kept such watch upon my soul,
As had not let a shadow from a dream
Fall on your image there ; but not a word
Of courtship pass'd between us.

HALBERT.

Not a word.

Words are for lighter loves, that spread their films
Of glossy threads, which while the air's serene
Float gracefully, and sparkle in the sun
Of fortune, or reflect the fainter beams
Which moonlight fancy sheds ; but ours—yes, ours !—
Was woven with the toughest yarn of life,
For it was blended with the noblest things
We lived for ; with the majesties of old ;
The sable train of mighty griefs o'erarched
By time's deep shadows ; with the fate of kings,—

A glorious dynasty by faction crush'd
 With the great sentiments which made them strong
 In the affections of mankind ;—with grief
 For rock-encircled Scotland ; with poor fortune
 Shared cheerfully ; with high resolves ; with thoughts
 Of death ; and with the hopes that cannot die.

HELEN.

Hold ! If you rend oblivion's slender veil
 Thus fearfully, and spectres of the past
 Glide o'er my startled spirit, it will fail
 In reason.

HALBERT.

No ;—it shall cast off this cloud,
 And retain no impression save of things
 Which last for ever ;—for to such our love
 Has been allied. How often have we stood,
 Clasp'd on yon terrace by columnar rocks,
 Upon whose jagged orifice the sky
 With its few stars seem'd pillar'd, and have felt
 Our earthly fortunes, bounded like the gorge
 That held us, had an avenue beyond,
 Like that we gazed on ; and when summer eve
 Has tempted us to wander on the bank
 Of glory-tinged Loch-Leven, till the sea
 Open'd beyond the mountains, and the thoughts
 Of limitless expanse were render'd sweet
 By crowding memories of delicious hours
 Sooth'd by its murmur, we have own'd and bless'd
 The presence of eternity and home !

HELEN.

What shall I do ?

HALBERT.

Hear me while I invoke
The spirit of one moment to attest,
In the great eye of love-approving Heaven,
We are each other's. When a fragile bark
Convey'd our little household to partake
The blessing that yet lingers o'er the shrine
Of desolate Iona, the faint breath
Of evening wafted us through cluster'd piles
Of gently-moulded columns, which the sea—
Softening from tenderest green to foam more white
Than snow-wreaths on a marble ridge—illumed
As 'twould dissolve and win them ;—till a cave,
The glorious work of angel architects
Sent on commission to the sacred isle,
From which, as from a fountain, God's own light
Stream'd o'er dark Europe—in its fretted span
Embraced us.—Pedestals of glistening black
Rose, as if waiting for the airy tread
Of some enraptured seraph who might pause
To see blue ocean through the sculptured ribs
Of the tall arch-way's curve, delight to lend
His vastness to the lovely. We were charm'd,
Not awe-struck ;—for the Beautiful was there
Triumphant in its palace. As we gazed
Rapt and enamour'd, our small vessel struck
The cavern's side, and by a shock which seem'd
The last that we should suffer, you were thrown Upon my neck—you clasp'd me then ;—and shared
One thought of love and heaven !

HELEN.

Am I indeed

Faithless, yet knew it not? My soul's perplex'd :—
 Distracted. Whither shall it turn ?—To you !—
 Be you its arbiter. Of you I ask,
 In your own clear simplicity of heart,
 Did you believe me yours ?

HALBERT.

Yes ; then and ever :
 Here, with this token I assure you mine,
 [Places a ring on her finger.
 In sight of angels. Bless you !

HELEN.

It is done.
 I dare not, cannot, tear this ring away.

HALBERT.

It but denotes what Heaven has register'd ;
 We must not pause : when will you grant this pledge
 Shall be redeem'd ? To-morrow ?

HELEN.

Give me time
 To speak with—to call in my scatter'd thoughts.

HALBERT.

The next day, then ?

HELEN.

Direct it as you please ;
 Would I were worthy !—pray you leave me now.

HALBERT.

I go to share my blessedness with her
 Whose love you share with me ;—our mother, Helen.

[Exit HALBERT.]

HELEN.

Where am I?—can I wake from this strange dream?

[Observes the ring.

No—'tis all real—the good and brave alone
Have power upon the spirits of the guiltless
To raise or crush them. O that I had met
All evil things—oppression—slander—hate—
How would I have defied them!

Enter LADY MACDONALD.

LADY MACDONALD.

Is it true

You have consented to wed Halbert?

HELEN.

Yes.

LADY MACDONALD.

My child, come to my heart. How's this? You are pale
And cold as marble.

HELEN.

You may well regard

My purpose with distrust;—but when I take
The noble Halbert's hand, I'll bid adieu
To every recollection which may touch
My duty to him. I shall never muse
On childhood's pleasures, innocent no more
For me;—shall never tread the shelter'd paths
Which I have lately linger'd in; nor think
Upon a soldier's glories; nor repeat
One name—O never!—I am very weak,
I did not know how weak. The Virgin aid me!

LADY MACDONALD.

She will, my lovely one.

U

HELEN.

I'll seek the chapel,
If these poor limbs will bear me.—On your bosom
I must seek strength first, mother.

LADY MACDONALD.

Weep there, child,
And may Heaven's arms encircle you as mine ! [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Terrace before the Tower of Halbert.—Time,—Noon of the Sixteenth Day.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

HENRY.

Will no one answer me ?—I call in vain ;—
And must pass on without that glimpse of Helen
I came to win. [KENNETH crosses the stage.

Stay, fellow ; where's my mother ?

KENNETH.

She is preparing for our master's wedding,
Of which our notice has been short ; 'twas yesterday
Appointed for to-morrow.

HENRY.

Halbert's wedding !—
That's pleasant news, though strange ;—to think my brother,

My solemn brother, all this time in love !
He has not trusted me : so I must ask
Of you, the fair one's name.

KENNETH.

Name !—surely, sir,
It could be none but Helen Campbell.

HENRY.

Cease

Your jesting with that name, or with my sword
I'll try to teach you manners.

KENNETH.

Jesting, sir !—

We have little jesting here ;—although these walls
Will ring for once, when our dear master gives them
So kind a mistress.

HENRY.

Dare you mock me ? No !—

I will not vent my rage on you ;—if this
Is not a jest, tell your kind mistress,—here
Henry Macdonald waits her !—bid her come
And answer to him as she cares for life.

KENNETH.

I'll seek her, sir.

HENRY.

Begone.

[Exit KENNETH.

Can this be true ?

Yes ; that poor knave would never dare invent
A tale so monstrous ;—but it passes all
My lightest comrades tell of woman's falsehood.
How will they scoff at me—duped and despised
By this meek mountain damsel—cast aside

For a dull dreamer of the rocks, who dared
 To school me with his wisdom ! Wise, indeed,
 The lady has become, to leave my hopes
 Of wealth and glory for these crazy walls,
 And solemn disputations. 'Tis a jest,
 I' faith a merry one !—her uncle, too,
 My captain and my friend !—Most generous brother,
 I'll mar your triumph yet !

Enter HELEN.

So ! You are here !

HELEN.

Yes ; on a summons couch'd in terms more harsh
 Than needful : I had come on lightest word
 That spoke your wish to see me.

HENRY.

Do you talk
 To me of harshness ! Look me in the face—
 Look steadily upon me, and reply
 To one brief question.

[HENRY seizes HELEN's arm ; she looks at him and turns away.]

HENRY.

No !—I need not ask it.
 Yet hold one moment ; is the bridegroom here ?
 I long to wish him joy.

HELEN.

Accuse him not :
 He's innocent of all.

HENRY.

O, doubtless ! Still
 'Twas churlish not to bid me to his bridal ;
 What is the happy hour ?

HELEN.

Sunrise.

HENRY.

Until

That hour, farewell.

HELEN.

O leave me not in scorn !

But as you are a brave man, to the weak
Be merciful. Although no plighted faith
Is broken with you, I will not allow
A base self-flattery to conceal the truth
That I have wrong'd you—stolen delightful hours,
And cherish'd gentle vanities, with heart
Too joyous to revert to holy ties
Long woven, though unrecognised, which link'd
My destiny to Halbert's. He has shown
That, though I knew it not, my life is his,
And I have own'd his title to the hand
This ring enriches.

HENRY.

And for dreams like this

You have repell'd a soldier's love, which you,
And only you, could have secured—released him
From the sole anchor of a giddy youth,
(So you described it,) and yourself from share
Of his young fortunes, and the ample dowry
With which your uncle would have graced them !

HELEN.

Stain not

The few sad moments we may spend with thought
So little worthy. Had my lot been cast
With yours, I should have cared for no success

Save as it made you happier ; sought no pleasures
 But the perennial gaiety your mirth
 Could shed around me ;—deem'd no travel long
 If shared with—Hold !—Accept my last farewell ;—
 May that undaunted courage which breathes in you
 Inspire you to attain the airiest heights
 Of glory, and upon them carve a name
 Resplendent to all soldiers, yet your frankness
 Dispel all envy from it ; may your feasts,
 Crown'd with delights, be shared by noblest friends ;
 And from your towering fortunes, may the cloud
 Which a slight woman's wayward fancy wreathed
 Around them, in soft sunshine melt at once,
 And, with her, be forgotten ! So Heaven speed you !

[Exit HELEN.

HENRY.

Yes ; it will speed me ; for she loves me still !
 But I forget my duty ;—this despatch
 Is waited for by him who shall avenge me !

[Exit HENRY MACDONALD.

SCENE II.—The Quarters of Glenlyon.

GLENLYON—LINDSAY.

GLENLYON.

Surely 'tis time Macdonald had return'd :
 The readiest, boldest, and most constant officer
 I ever yet promoted ;—some mischance
 Or treachery must delay him. Treachery—faugh !
 'Tis an ill word, but may import no more
 Than a safe means of justice, which rash force
 Might frustrate. Would our messenger were here !

LINDSAY.

Indeed time presses ; we shall bear the charge
Of weakness for the doubt which has delay'd
The course prescribed.

GLENLYON.

He was not wont to loiter.
If the command be clear, my course is plain ;
And yet—he comes—could I suspect he knew
The tidings that he bears, his face would tell them.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

How's this ? your looks are wild ; have you met aught
Should shake a brave man's constancy ?

HENRY.

I crave
Your pardon ; 'tis a private grief unnerves me ;
The lovely lady who has shared my walks,
And, as I proudly thought, return'd the love
She had inspired in me, at sunrise weds
My elder brother. What of that ? My duty
Has been perform'd ;—and Duncanson's reply
Is here.

[HENRY delivers a letter to GLENLYON.

GLENLYON.

Thanks ;—wait within ;—refresh yourself ;—
I'll deal with your fair rebel. [Exit HENRY MACDONALD.

My hand trembles
As it has never trembled ;—I shall mar
The seal ;—open and read the letter.—

[LINDSAY opens and reads the letter.

Well ?

LINDSAY.

It is as I expected, and you fear'd ;

The order is to guard the avenues
 To-night ; and before morning, put in force
 The royal ordinance on the lives of all
 Below the age of seventy.

GLENLYON.

Would that death
 Had met me first !

LINDSAY.

Yet you will not withhold
 Obedience ?

GLENLYON.

Never ;—I am shaken now,
 But you shall find me constant to obey
 The simple law of duty :—none shall live.

LINDSAY.

Think of these clansmen as of rebels snared
 In treason, whom a law, disdaining forms,
 Has sentenced : it is hard to make brave soldiers
 Anticipate the headsman with their swords ;
 Yet we must do our office.

GLENLYON.

Be it yours
 To show the men their duty.

LINDSAY.

I will do
 All you may order ; but I cannot range
 The soldiers so as to prevent escape
 Through the wild passes of these mountains ; none,
 Unless familiar with the glen, can do this.

GLENLYON.

Call in Macdonald.

[Exit LINDSAY.]

He shall plant the men :
His present passion moulds him to our will.

Re-enter LINDSAY and HENRY MACDONALD.

[To HENRY.] There is a service I would claim of you,
Which, well achieved, shall humble to your feet
The rival who presumes to cross your wish
For great alliance, and reward your love
With happiest fortune.

HENRY.

Let the service be
So full of peril that the chance of life
Bears but a thousandth portion of the hope
That death is greedy with, and I embrace it.

GLENLYON.

It lacks the peril you desire. This clan,
Though crouching now to William's power, retains
Its lion fierceness. We must tame its chiefs
By forcing them, in abject terms, to sue
For pardon—yield their hidden stores of arms—
And feel themselves subdued. At dawn to-morrow
We'll awe them to submission, by array
Of soldiers, planted in each track, whose arms
Shall make the glen their prison. What I seek
Is, that at midnight, you, who know the paths,
Would so dispose the soldiers, that no clansman
Escape the vale—save by the eastern road,
Which Duncanson will line ;—that done, repose—
And dream that at the sunrise you shall see
Your daring rival suppliant, and my niece
Your wealthy bride. Will you do this ?

HENRY.

I will.

Enter DRUMMOND.

DRUMMOND.

I come to ask if I shall bid the band
Attend you at the feast.

GLENLYON.

What feast?

LINDSAY.

The banquet
Mac Ian gives to-day :—the hour is near.

GLENLYON.

A banquet! that is terrible.

LINDSAY (apart to GLENLYON).

Be wary;

Eyes are upon us. [Aloud]. You will send the band ;
All we can do should grace our visit.

GLENLYON (to DRUMMOND).

Yes :

You may retire.

[Exit DRUMMOND.]

[To HENRY] At dawn I will attend
Your bridal ; 'twill be yours. At this night's feast
Beware that by no word or look you hint
The midnight's duty or the morning's hope :
Be calm—as I am.

[Exeunt GLENLYON and LINDSAY.]

HENRY (alone).

How shall I subdue
The mantling sense of victory which laughs
And dances in my spirit ? He who dash'd
My weapon from my grasp shall feel he stands

Before his master; chidden as I was,
 And, for a moment, silenced, I shall rain
 Pardon and life on him who would have stolen
 The mistress of my soul! She's mine! She's mine!

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Terrace before Halbert's Tower.Enter LADY MACDONALD and HALBERT.

HALBERT.

Is she so pensive still?

LADY MACDONALD.

Alas! in vain

I watch to see some gleam of pleasure light
 Her mournful eyes. Save that her fingers ply
 The needle constantly, as if they wrought
 From habit of sweet motion, you might doubt
 If in her statue-like and silent beauty
 The life of this world stirr'd.

HALBERT.

If Henry broke

Upon her suddenly, his harsh demeanour
 Might drive the colour from her cheeks, and scare
 Her thoughts from their repose.

LADY MACDONALD.

I cannot hope it;

She has been more serene since then. Before,
 She would pursue her work with restless hand;
 Leave it and pace the room; sit down and sigh,
 As if her heart were breaking; wring her hands;

And then—as finding strength to chase some image
 That madden'd her away,—toss back her head,
 And smiling, urge her needle with more speed
 Than at the first ; but since she spoke with Henry
 She has been calm, though sad, as one beyond
 The reach of fear or hope ; who saw her course
 And was resign'd to follow it.

HALBERT.

Resign'd !

Is that my sum of happiness ? To hold
 As in a tyrant's grasp, a lovely form
 Subdued by its own gentleness, yet know
 That the celestial mind defies the power
 Of finest bonds,—and from the winning smile
 In which fond custom wreathes the face, escapes
 To scenes long past, or for a distant voice
 Waits listening ! I have held the gaoler's lot,
 Far heavier than his captive's ; yet how light
 His chains to those I must inflict and bear !

LADY MACDONALD.

You wrong my lovely daughter ;—when she weds,
 Each wish, each hope, each fancy which might dim
 The brightness of her constancy, will fly
 For ever. Her affections have been toss'd,
 But not perverted ; as the water keeps
 Its crystal beauty in its bed of rock,
 Though vex'd by winds which from a cloudless sky
 Sweep o'er our mountain tarns, her soul perplex'd
 By contrary emotions, caught no taint,
 Sunk or uplifted, but will settle, calm
 As if no breath had wreath'd it. She will prove

With all her soul a true wife to you, Halbert,
Though not a blithe one.

HALBERT.

Do you not believe
She will be happy soon ?

LADY MACDONALD.

She will be tranquil ;
But if you ask me if she will enjoy
The happiness for which her nature's framed,
I cannot veil my fears.

HALBERT.

What should I do ?
I have known fearful heart-struggles ; but this
Makes all seem gentle.

LADY MACDONALD.

There is in your soul
A noble purpose.

HALBERT.

Must I give up all,
And yet live on ? No earthly hope remains
For me if this be blasted. With the fall
Of the great objects which my youth revered,
I lost all power to mingle in the strifes
Of this new-modell'd world. I cannot taste
The sweet resources Heaven, in grace, provides
For love-lorn manhood ; thirst of fame in me
Is quench'd ; society's miscall'd delights
Would fret me into ecstacy ; and war,
The glorious refuge of despair, would seem
A slaughterous and a mercenary trade

To one who has no country. If I act
 The thought which fills your bosom, I must live
 Loveless and hopeless. Can you ask it, mother?

LADY MACDONALD.

I cannot ask it. But I thought I saw
 High resolution gathering, while I spoke
 Of Helen's present state, and what I fear
 'Twill be when—

HALBERT (stopping her).

Speak no more. It shall not be;
 I will make ready for the sacrifice.

LADY MACDONALD.

My noble son! Let me embrace you, proud
 As never Roman mother in the arms
 Of her crown'd hero. Shall I speak to Helen?

HALBERT.

No—not for worlds—I cannot utter yet
 The irrevocable word. It may be still
 That you misjudge her;—or that she mistakes
 Her heart's true feeling. I will wait the morn.

Enter ALASTER MACDONALD.

ALASTER.

My father sends me with a gracious message
 Which I rejoice to bear, though it confess
 A fault in him; he offers you his hand,
 With frank confession he has done you wrong,
 And claims your presence at the feast he gives
 To-day to Argyle's officers.

HALBERT.

Dear cousin,

I am most happy in Mac Ian's love,
 And will with earnest duty answer it ;
 But I entreat him to excuse me now,
 For I am busy with sick thoughts ; unfit
 For high festivity.

ALASTER.

I know you hate,
 As I do, this submission ; but 'tis made ;
 No courtesies can make it deeper. Hark !

[Distant music heard.

The guests assemble now.

HALBERT.

That music breathes
 As when I heard it first ;—in lively strain
 It vibrates on the ear, but on my soul
 Falls like a dirge. Some awful doom awaits
 Our race, and thus through sounds of this world speaks
 To the mind's ear. I will avert or share it.
 Yes ;—I attend you. Mother, you will watch
 Your precious charge as if on every glance
 A life depended ? I am sure you will.

[Exit LADY MACDONALD.

Now, Alaster, I am ready for your feast.

[Exeunt HALBERT and ALASTER.

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Mac Ian's House.—A Banquet.—MAC IAN, ANGUS, DONALD, JOHN MACDONALD, GLENLYON, LINDSAY, HENRY MACDONALD, Officers of Argyle's Regiment, and Clansmen, seated.

MAC IAN (rising).

Once more I thank you for the grace you pay
 To a fallen chief, whose name and title live
 As shadows of the past ; but who can taste

A comfort in his downfall, while brave men
 Show, by their courteous action, they preserve
 Respect for what he has been. Let us drink
 A health to those you serve ;—the Majesties
 Of England ; whom to death I had withstood,
 Had hope for James's cause remain'd ; but whom,
 That hope extinguish'd, I will frankly serve.
 Rise, clansmen ! Drink to William and his Queen,
 To whom we owe our duty.

GLENLYON.

We esteem

The pledge at its just value.

MAC IAN.

I perceive
 Your thoughts still wrong me. Stoutly have I fought
 Upon King James's side ; but with Dundee
 His cause expired. I felt it when he fell,
 Lifting his arm to wave these clansmen on,
 To make his triumph sure. The menial slave,
 The household traitor, who, with felon hand,
 Stole then his noble life, destroy'd, in him,
 A line of monarchs. While the tangled woods
 Of Killikrankie rang with shrill delight
 Of our victorious Highlanders, I knew
 That we were conquer'd ; and I sheathed my sword
 For ever.

ANGUS (apart to DONALD).

Do you mark him !

DONALD.

Yes ; his life
 Casts out its dying flash. He's doom'd.

GLENLYON.

You wrong

Your gallant comrades ; surely loss of one
 Might be supplied.

MAC IAN.

Not of a man like him.

'Tis not in multitudes of common minds
 That by contagious impulses are sway'd,
 Like rushes in the wind, a mighty cause
 Can live ; but in the master mind of one
 Who sways them. Sooner would these glorious hills
 If crush'd to powder, with their atoms guard
 Our glens, than million clansmen fill the place
 Of such a chief. Would I had died with him !
 No more of this ; fill me some wine.

[Drinks.

Enter ALASTER and HALBERT.

Your leave

One moment. [MAC IAN comes to HALBERT, and takes his hand.

MAC IAN.

Halbert, I lack words to thank
 This kindness as I ought.

HALBERT.

It is deep joy
 For me to know I am at peace with all,
 And, most of all, with you.

MAC IAN.

'Tis very strange :

I am amazed how I could doubt your faith ;
 A film is passing from my soul, that leaves
 All clear within its vision. Take your place.

[HALBERT and ALASTER sit on the opposite side of the hall to GLENLYON and LINDSAY.

X

MAC IAN (resuming his seat).

Your pardon. Let us drain another cup
To our chief guest, Glenlyon ; frank in war,
And generous in alliance.

HALBERT (to ALASTER).

Watch him now;
He changes ; see—his very lips are pale ;—
I will unmask him.

ALASTER.

Pray forbear.

GLENLYON.

Accept

A soldier's thanks.

HALBERT (to ALASTER).

His voice is choked—look now—
Do you not see him shiver ?

ALASTER.

It is but fancy ;
How can he hope to see us more abased
Than he has made us ?

MAC IAN (to GLENLYON).

You must pledge me now ;—
Wine to Glenlyon.

[GLENLYON rises—takes the cup—puts it to his lips—and hastily returns it.

HALBERT.

He does not taste the wine,
He dares not taste it. Hold me not.

[Breaking from ALASTER.
Glenlyon !

Why did you put aside the untasted cup ?

Why did you change and glare? Why is your heart—
 Your hollow heart—shivering and shrinking now?
 Look on him, friends! Mac Ian!—Angus!—Donald!
 John!—Alaster! Does some infernal charm
 Delude you, that you rise not?

[To GLENLYON.] Answer me!

What fiendish thought was yours when you withdrew
 That goblet from your lips?

LINDSAY.

Who's this that dares
 Insult Glenlyon?

HALBERT.

Parasite, I speak not
 To such as you! Behold him now! He's silent.

LINDSAY.

In scorn.

[To GLENLYON.] You will not deign to make reply
 To this coarse brawler? Let us go.

GLENLYON (addressing MAC IAN).

Farewell!

You cannot curb the rudeness of your followers,
 Nor I endure it.

[GLENLYON and LINDSAY retiring.

HALBERT.

Let them not depart;
 Not for myself I speak,—for I shall find
 No time so fit to die; but for your wives—
 Your sires—your babes—your all. Glenlyon! turn,
 If you have so much nature as to look
 The thing you dare.

GLENLYON (turning).

Be brief in your demand.

What is your pleasure?

HALBERT.

That you spend three minutes
With me in the cold moonlight;—arm'd;—alone.

GLENLYON.

With you—a conquer'd rebel?

MAC IAN (holding HALBERT).

He's a guest

Beneath this roof's protection.

HALBERT.

Let him claim
Its shelter if he dares, and I will kneel
And he shall trample on me.

LINDSAY (to GLENLYON).

Come away!

ALASTER.

Dear Halbert, do not risk a life so dear
As yours is to my father.

HALBERT.

Risk my life—

Dost see him? There is that within his breast
Would paralyse his arm, and make his knees
Tremble, and bid the stubborn soldier fall
Half slain without the steel;—

[To GLENLYON.] I charge on you
Black treason—what I know not yet—I feel it;
Will you confess, or meet me?

LINDSAY.

Do not answer.

GLENLYON.

I meet you!—Talk to me of treason!—me
Who bear the lawful orders of a king
To whom you are a traitor;—whom your race,
With all the hatred of their savage thoughts,
Abjure;—but he shall curb them—they shall feel
His power in me. Your worthless life, rash fool,
To-night I spare;—but if again we meet,
It shall be as you wish, for death. [Exeunt GLENLYON, &c.

HALBERT.

It shall.

MAC IAN (to HALBERT).

I thank your generous courage, but I look
With wonder on your passion.

HALBERT.

What! does nothing
Whisper of peril to you?

MAC IAN.

No—my heart
Is jocund;—stripp'd of glory, power, and name,
We shall be soon united and at peace.

HALBERT.

Heaven grant it!

ALASTER.

I would rather die to-morrow,
If I might choose, than hold the sweetest home
At England's mercy.

HALBERT.

My brave cousin! Blessings
In life and death be with you.

MAC IAN.

Come away;
This sadness will infect us. There's my hand
And my heart with it.

ALASTER.

And mine too.

JOHN.

And mine.

MAC IAN.

Farewell;—no strife shall separate us more.

[Exeunt MAC IAN, ALASTER, and JOHN.

HALBERT.

That's well!—

[Sees HENRY.

My brother here?—he wakes my soul
To its own sufferings. Yet we must not part thus.
Brother!

HENRY.

What would you with me?

HALBERT.

I would know
We part to-night as brothers should; you think
That you have cause to blame me: wait awhile,
And you may judge me better.

HENRY.

Blame you?—No—

Not I—except that you forgot to bid
Your brother to your bridal. He'll make bold
To go unbidden.

HALBERT.

Fail not;—you may find
A blessing there you will be grateful for.

HENRY (aside).

Can he suspect my purpose?—Oh, too well
You have deserved my thanks, and there will add
A crowning favour.

HALBERT.

I will take your hand;
It trembles.

HENRY.

No;—or if it shakes,—the night
Chills it with frost. It will be firm to-morrow.

[Exit HENRY MACDONALD.

HALBERT.

To-morrow!—that will settle all—I'll seek
My mother now;—if she is still assured
That Helen loves—I cannot bear the thought—
Silence and darkness teach me to endure it!

[Exit HALBERT MACDONALD.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Chapel adjoining Halbert's Tower, partly in ruins, in which is seen the Tomb of Halbert's Father.—Morning just breaking.

Enter HALBERT MACDONALD.

HALBERT.

The hour approaches when my life's last hope
Will be extinguish'd ;—it is quivering now
Upon the verge of darkness ;—yet I feel
No pang—no throb. My spirit is serene,
As if prepared to cleave celestial air
To passionless delights—this calm within me
Has in it something awful.

Enter LADY MACDONALD.

Wish me joy.

LADY MACDONALD.

Joy, Halbert?—

HALBERT.

Yes ;—of victory achieved
O'er the last passion which can ever rack
My bosom. I can bear to ask you now,
If any change in Helen raises doubt
How she will answer, when—I am not yet arm'd
As I have boasted.

LADY MACDONALD.

No ;—she scarcely raised
Her head, until her work—a bridal robe—

Hung dazzling on her arm ; as then she sought
Her chamber, I impress'd one solemn kiss
Upon her icy brow : then as aroused
From stupor by poor sympathy, she threw
Her arms around my neck ; and whispering low,
But piercingly, conjured me to keep watch
Upon her thinkings, lest one erring wish
Should rise to mar her duty to her lord,

HALBERT.

I ask no more, till in this holy place
Her soul shall answer me ; too well I know
The issue ; yet I shrink not, nor repine.

LADY MACDONALD.

Your calmness frightens me ; you think of death.

HALBERT.

But as a thing to sigh for, not to seek ;
I never will forsake you for the grave,
Till Heaven dismiss me thither. Has she slept ?

LADY MACDONALD.

I know not ; but her chamber has been voiceless,
Until, on notice of the priest arrived,
She sent to pray the guidance of his arm
To lead her to this place.

HALBERT.

The priest arrived !

O what a world of happiness these words
Should indicate. It opens now to show
Its glories melting into air. They come—
Her step is heavy ; may the heart that sways it
Go lighter hence !

Enter the Priest, leading HELEN, in bridal attire.

HALBERT (meeting them).

Before a solemn change
Shall pass on our condition, let me claim
One kiss, in memory of the wintry paths
Which we have walk'd with purity of heart
And heaven-ward aspect ;—should death take us now,
It had no terrors.

[Kisses HELEN's forehead.]

PRIEST.

Sir, your words are sad
For such an hour. Shall we begin the service ?

HALBERT.

We wait my brother's presence.

HELEN.

O not his !
I am quite ready ; let the rite proceed.

Enter HENRY MACDONALD.

HALBERT.

You are most welcome ;—we have waited for you.

HENRY (looking eagerly round).

Your pardon ; all are not assembled yet.
Where is Glenlyon ?

HALBERT.

Who ?

HENRY.

The lady's uncle.
He has, no doubt, approved her choice, and means
To grace the ceremonial. You will wait
His coming ?

HALBERT.

He resign'd this lovely one
To those who knew her worth ; he shall not now
Infest the roof that shelters her.

HENRY (aside).

All lost !

What can detain him ?

PRIEST.

Shall the rite proceed ?

HALBERT.

I have a few momentous words to speak
Before the rites begin ;—to you, fair Helen,
I must address them ; but I pray my brother,
Whom they touch nearly, to attend.

HENRY.

I listen.

HALBERT.

How, through sad years, the consecrated joy
Which seems to wait me at this hour, has dawn'd
And brighten'd, from its first uncertain rays
Along the rugged pathway of a life
Else unadorn'd, my passion-fever'd speech
Has shown ;—nor less divine the vision glows
Now it stands clear before me, and invites
To mingle heaven with earth. You cannot doubt it.

HELEN.

Never ;—I only wish I could deserve
A love like yours.

HALBERT.

Yet ere I grasp this dream,

And make its phantoms real ;—within these walls
 By both revered ;—where side by side we knelt
 In infantine humility, and faith
 No question ruffled ; where your spirit sought
 To cast from its pure mirror, each faint cloud
 Which jocund thoughts might breathe or nicest fear .
 Imagine to o'erspread it ;—at the tomb
 Of him who watches o'er his trembling son,
 At this dread crisis of his fate ;—I ask you—
 Explore your heart ; and if you find a wish
 That glances at another fortune, speak it !

HELEN.

Have mercy on me !

HALBERT.

You have seen me chafed
 By passion worse than aimless in a soul
 Whose destinies are fashion'd by a power
 Wise, bountiful, resistless ;—and the words
 Such frenzy dashes with its foam might seem
 To urge that one unlike myself must prove
 Unfit for your affection. Hear me now,
 When calmer reason governs me ! There stands
 One near to me in blood ; a soldier, valiant,
 And raised above all baseness ; in the bloom
 And gladness of his youth ; who loves you—not
 Perchance as I do—but who loves you well ;—
 You are a soldier's child ;—your noble heart
 May, from most natural impulse, turn to one
 Endow'd and graced as he is ;—if I read
 Your wish aright—I'll join this hand with his,—
 As freely as I would relinquish life
 To succour yours.

HELEN (sinking on her knee before HALBERT).

Heaven bless you !

HALBERT (raising HELEN).

"Tis enough ;

Now let me draw this ring away—'tis done—
You'll let me wear it for a little time—
A very little time ? Come, Henry,—take
This hand, with the free blessing of a man
Whose all is given with it.

[Takes HENRY's hand to join it to HELEN's. HENRY stands abstracted.

HALBERT.

You are cold—
Your thoughts are far away :—a blackness spreads
Across your face ; speak to us !

HELEN.

He is stricken
With wonder at your goodness. Henry; Love !
Join me to bless your brother.

HENRY.

Will no bolt
From Heaven fall on this head !

HELEN.

His senses wander,
Scared at this sudden happiness ;—anon
All will be well. [Grasps his arm.

HENRY.

O never !—do not gaze
Upon me ;—Helen, touch me not ;—fly all !

HALBERT.

Wherefore ? From whom ?

HENRY.

O God ! I cannot tell it.

[A confused cry heard far in the Valley below.

HALBERT.

What cry is that ?

LADY MACDONALD.

The shrieks of death arise.

HENRY.

Not death !

Enter ANGUS.

ANGUS.

Fly for your lives ; our cherish'd guests
Have fall'n upon the clansmen wrapp'd in sleep
With murderous swords, and burning hovels light
Their slaughterous way.

HENRY.

'Tis false.

ANGUS.

False ! Hark ! Behold !

[Another cry heard more distinctly from the Valley, and the glare of distant fire seen.

HENRY.

O misery ! I meant not this.

HALBERT.

You !

Enter ALASTER MACDONALD wounded.

ALASTER.

Cousin—

Halbert—I've struggled through the ranks of death
Dying, to cry for justice. A few moments—
And my poor life expended, you will bear
The chieftain's sword.

HALBERT.

Where is your father?

ALASTER.

Slain.

HALBERT.

And John?

ALASTER.

Both murder'd in their sleep. I cry
For justice on the head of him who ranged
The assassins. Hear me! I would kneel and pray,
But my joints stiffen.

HALBERT.

Where's the traitor?

ALASTER (looking round, sees HENRY and exclaims).

There!

[Falls lifeless into the arms of the Priest, who bears him out.

HALBERT.

My most unhappy brother!

PRIEST (returning).

He has pass'd.

HALBERT.

And I am chief! This is the fatal hour
That Moina saw.

[ANGUS and Attendants kneel to HALBERT.

Ancestral shades, I see

You beckon in yon flame. Let me sit here;
The grave will serve. Where does the traitor stand?

HENRY.

Here! Chief of the Macdonalds, let my blood
Atone my crime. I meant not death—I meant
Defeat to you, whose heart I little guess'd

Till I implore death from it ! Vindicate
The ancient power, which perishes while thus
I pray to be its victim. Do you hear ?

[Renewed cries from the Valley.
Release me from those cries ; give me one look
Of love, and end me !

HALBERT.

Will none plead for him ?

HELEN.

It was for me.

[To LADY MACDONALD.

Plead for your son !

LADY MACDONALD.

I plead
For him who, plotting infamy, has brought
Death on our race ! No ! All things round me plead
Against him ; and that wail is fraught with shrieks
Of mothers, who, with death's convulsions, strive
In vain to shield their infants—such as he
Was once—as innocent, as blithe, as fair—
O Henry ! Henry ! could I die for you !

[LADY MACDONALD falls on HENRY's neck. Another cry heard. She starts away. HELEN sinks on her knees beside the tomb.

HENRY.

I'm ready.

HALBERT.

There !—without.

HENRY.

I'll wait you there.

HALBERT.

Will Heaven vouchsafe no refuge ?

[As he raises his arms in supplication, a shot strikes him ; he falls.

That is well.

Mercy, most full of grace ; I am absolved.

Enter GLENLYON.

GLENLYON.

Am I too late? My niece——

HELEN.

Away! away!

HENRY (rushing on GLENLYON).

Die, murderer!

LADY MACDONALD (stops his arm).

Let him live. Glenlyon,
I pray you may have life stretch'd out beyond
The common span of mortals, to endure
The curse of Glencoe cleaving to your soul!

HELEN.

Amen! May Glencoe's curse be ever with you!

GLENLYON.

It is upon me; yet I will preserve you.

HALBERT.

Leave us to die.

Enter DRUMMOND.

DRUMMOND.

I seek Glenlyon here.
The eastern pass is open; Duncanson
Has not arrived: that way the clansmen fly.

GLENLYON.

Heaven speed them!

[Exit GLENLYON.

HENRY.

There will I oppose this breast
To the pursuing demons, till I win
The death I thirst for.

[Exit HENRY.

Y

HELEN.

Henry ! [Sinks on the ground.]

HALBERT.

There is comfort ;
Raise me to clasp my mother. You will pray
For Henry ;—and will own a child in her
Whom mercy spares this moment. [To the Priest.]

To your charge
I leave the gathering of my scanty fortune,
Which will provide a refuge for these sad ones
In some small convent, where they'll weep out life.
Will you do this ?

PRIEST.

I will.

HALBERT.

Bless you ! I mark
The face which gazed in pity on my rage
Beside my father's death-bed :—'tis subdued—
Hush'd—conquer'd—pardon'd—and I die in peace.
[Dies.]

NOTES TO GLENCOE.

Page 287.

*"We were charm'd,
Not awe-struck;—for the Beautiful was there
Triumphant in its palace."*

In seeking to embody in this passage the author's impression of the Cave of Fingal, in Staffa, he is aware that it differs from that which all the descriptions he has read of the same scene convey. All suggest far greater dimensions—a cavern more vast and awful, but less exquisite in beauty, than to his eye the reality justifies. "Compared to this (it has been said), what are the cathedrals or the palaces built by men?—mere models or playthings;—imitative or diminutive as his works will always be when compared with those of nature." According to the author's recollection, the cave would be more fitly compared to a narrow aisle of a great cathedral, fashioned with nicest art, and embellished with the most florid sculpture, than represented as something immeasurably greater than the cathedral itself; and the actual admeasurement of the cave will rather accord with this impression, than with that which is more popular. The height of the top of the arch above the water at mean tide is sixty-six feet; the breadth at the entrance forty-two feet; whence it contracts during its length of two hundred and twenty-seven feet, until at the extremity it is only twenty-two feet in width; and the roof descends in nearly the same proportion. When it is further recollected that even this width is narrowed to the eye by the row of exquisite columns which continue on the northern side, and along which the adventurer may step, and that a slight bend about half way breaks its uniformity, perhaps he will be pardoned for thinking that there has been much exaggeration in attributing the grandeur which arises from space and gloom to this wonderful cavern. On the other hand, justice has not been done—indeed, never can be done by words—to the fairy loveliness of the scene,—the delicate colour of the water,—the grace of the columns,—the elegance of the arched roof, and the blue serenity of the distant sea, as seen from beneath it.

Page 296.

*"The order is to guard the avenues
To-night; and before morning, put in force
The royal ordinance on the lives of all
Below the age of seventy."*

The following is Sir Walter Scott's narrative of the massacre:—

Mac Ian of Glencoe (this was the patronymic title of the chief of this clan) was a man of a stately and venerable person and aspect. He possessed both courage and sagacity, and was accustomed to be listened to by the neighbouring chieftains, and to take a lead in their deliberations. Mac Ian had been deeply engaged both in the campaign of Killiecrankie, and in that which followed under General Buchan; and when the insurgent Highland chiefs held a meeting with the Earl of Breadalbane, at a place called Auchallader, in the month of July 1691, for the purpose of arranging an armistice, Mac Ian was present with the rest, and, it is said, taxed Breadalbane with the design of retaining a part of the money lodged in his hands for the pacification of the Highlands. The Earl retorted with vehemence, and charged Mac Ian with a theft of cattle, committed upon some of his lands by a party from Glencoe. Other causes of offence took place, in which old feuds were called to recollection; and Mac Ian was repeatedly heard to say, he dreaded mischief from no man so much as from the Earl of Breadalbane. Yet this unhappy chief was rash enough to stand out to the last moment, and decline to take advantage of King William's indemnity, till the time appointed by the proclamation was well nigh expired.

The displeasure of the Earl of Breadalbane seems speedily to have communicated itself to the Master of Stair, who, in his correspondence with Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, then commanding in the Highlands, expresses the greatest resentment against Mac Ian of Glencoe, for having, by his interference, marred the bargain between Breadalbane and the Highland chiefs. Accordingly, in a letter of 3rd December, the Secretary intimated that Government was determined to destroy utterly some of the clans, in order to terrify the others; and he hoped that, by standing out and refusing to submit under the indemnity, the Mac Donalds of Glencoe would fall into the net,—which meant that they would afford a pretext for their extirpation. This letter is dated a month before the time limited by the indemnity;—so long did these bloody thoughts occupy the mind of this unprincipled statesman.

Ere the time of mercy expired, however, Mac Ian's own apprehensions, or the advice of friends, dictated to him the necessity of submitting to the same conditions which others had embraced, and he went with his principal followers to take the oath of allegiance to King William. This was a very brief space before the 1st of January, when, by the terms of the proclamation, the opportunity of claiming the indemnity was to expire. Mac Ian was, therefore, much alarmed to find that Colonel Hill, the Governor of Fort William, to whom he tendered his oath of allegiance, had no power to receive it, being a military, and not a civil officer. Colonel Hill, however, sympathised with the distress, and even tears of the old chieftain, and gave him a letter to Sir Colin Campbell of Ardkinlas, Sheriff of Argyleshire, requesting him to receive the "lost sheep," and administer the oath to him, that he might have the advantage of the indemnity, though so late in claiming it.

Mac Ian hastened from Fort William to Inverary, without even turning aside to his own house, though he passed within a mile of it. But the roads, always very bad, were now rendered almost impassable by a storm of snow; so that, with all the speed the unfortunate chieftain could exert, the fatal 1st of January was past before he reached Inverary.

The Sheriff, however, seeing that Mac Ian had complied with the spirit of the statute, in tendering his submission within the given period, under the sincere, though mistaken belief, that he was applying to the person ordered to receive it; and considering also that, but for the tempestuous weather, it would after all have been offered in presence of the proper law-officer, did not hesitate to administer the oath of allegiance, and sent off an express to the Privy Council, containing an attestation of Mac Ian's having taken the oaths, and a full explanation of the circumstances which had delayed his doing so until the lapse of the appointed period. The Sheriff also wrote to Colonel Hill what he had done, and requested that he would take care that Glencoe should not be annoyed by any military parties until the pleasure of the Council should be known, which he could not doubt would be favourable.

Mac Ian, therefore, returned to his own house, and resided there, as he supposed, in safety, under the protection of the Government to which he had sworn allegiance. That he might merit this protection, he convoked his clan, acquainted them with his submission, and commanded them to live peaceably, and give no cause of offence, under pain of his displeasure.

In the meantime, the vindictive Secretary of State had procured orders from his sovereign respecting the measures to be followed with such of the chiefs as should not have taken the oaths within the term prescribed. The first of these orders, dated 11th January, contained peremptory directions for military execution, by fire and sword, against all who should not have made their submission within the time appointed. It was, however, provided, in order to avoid driving them to desperation, that there was still to remain a power of granting mercy to those clans who, even after the time was past, should still come in and submit themselves. Such were the terms of the first royal warrant, in which Glencoe was not expressly named.

It seems afterwards to have occurred to Stair, that Glencoe and his tribe would be sheltered under this mitigation of the intended severities, since he had already come in and tendered his allegiance, without waiting for the menace of military force. A second set of instructions were, therefore, made out on the 16th January. These held out the same indulgence to other clans, who should submit themselves at the very last hour (a hypocritical pretext, for there existed none which stood in such a predicament), but they closed the gate of mercy against the devoted Mac Ian, who had already done all that was required of others. The words are remarkable:—"As for Mac Ian of Glencoe, and that tribe, if they can be well distinguished from the rest of the Highlanders, it will be proper, for the vindication of public justice, to extirpate that set of thieves."

You will remark the hypocritical clemency and real cruelty of these instructions, which profess a readiness to extend mercy to those who needed it not (for all the other Highlanders had submitted within the limited time), and deny it to Glencoe, the only man who had not been able literally to comply with the proclamation, though, in all fair construction, he had done what it required.

Under what pretence or colouring King William's authority was obtained for such cruel instructions, it would be in vain to inquire. The Sheriff of Argyle's letter had never been produced before the Council; and the certificate of Mac Ian's having taken the oath was blotted out, and, in the Scottish phrase, deleted from the books of the Privy Council. It seems probable, therefore, that the fact of that chief's submission was altogether concealed from the King, and that he was held out in the light of a desperate and incorrigible leader of banditti, who was the main obstacle to the peace of the Highlands; but if we admit that William acted under such misrepresentations, deep blame will still attach to him for rashly issuing orders of an import so dreadful. It is remarkable that these fatal instructions are both superscribed and subscribed by the King himself, whereas, in most state papers, the sovereign only superscribes, and they are countersigned by the Secretary of State, who is answerable for their tenor; a responsibility which Stair, on that occasion, was not probably ambitious of claiming.

The secretary's letters to the military officers, directing the mode of executing the King's orders, betray the deep and savage interest which he took personally in their tenor, and his desire that the bloody measure should be as general as possible. He dwelt in these letters upon the proper time and season for cutting off the devoted tribe. "The winter," he said, "is the only season in which the Highlanders cannot elude us, or carry their wives, children, and cattle to the mountains. They cannot escape you; for what human constitution can then endure to be long out of house? This is the proper season to maul them, in the long dark nights." He could not suppress his joy that Glencoe had not come in within the term prescribed; and expresses his hearty wishes that others had followed the same course. He assured the soldiers that their power should be ample; and he exacted from them proportional exertions. He entreated that the thieving tribe of Glencoe might be rooted out in earnest; and he was at pains to explain a phrase which is in itself terribly significant. He gave directions for securing every pass by which the victims could escape, and warned the soldiers that it were better to leave the thing unattempted, than fail to do it to purpose. "To plunder their lands, or drive off their cattle, would," say his letters, "be only to render them desperate; they must be all slaughtered, and the manner of execution must be sure, secret, and effectual."

These instructions, such as have been rarely penned in a Christian country, were sent to Colonel Hill, the Governor of Fort William, who, greatly surprised and grieved at their tenor, endeavoured for some time to evade the execution of them. At length, obliged by his situation to render obedience to the King's commands, he transmitted the orders to Lieutenant Colonel Hamilton, directing him to take four hundred men of a Highland regiment belonging to the Earl of Argyle, and fulfil the royal mandate. Thus, to make what was intended yet worse, if possible, than it was in its whole tenor, the perpetration of this cruelty was committed to soldiers, who were not only the countrymen of the proscribed, but the near neighbours, and some of them the close connections of the Mac Donalds of Glencoe. This is the more necessary to be remembered because the massacre has unjustly been said to have been committed by English troops. The course of the bloody deed was as follows:

Before the end of January, a party of the Earl of Argyle's regiment, commanded by Captain Campbell of Glenlyon, approached Glencoe. Mac Ian's sons went out to meet them with a body of men, to demand whether they came as friends or foes. The officer replied, that they came as friends, being sent to take up their quarters for a short time in Glencoe, in order to relieve the garrison of Fort William, which was crowded with soldiers. On this they were welcomed with all the hospitality which the chief and his followers had the means of extending to them, and they resided for fifteen days amongst the unsuspecting Mac Donalds, in the exchange of every species of kindness and civility. That the laws of domestic affection might be violated at the same time with those of humanity and hospitality, you are to understand that Alaster Mac Donald, one of the sons of Mac Ian, was married to a niece of Glenlyon, who commanded the party of soldiers. It appears also that the intended cruelty was to be exercised upon defenceless men; for the Mac Donalds, though afraid of no other ill-treatment from their military guests, had supposed it possible that the soldiers might have a commission to disarm them, and therefore had sent their weapons to a distance, where they might be out of reach of seizure.

Glenlyon's party had remained in Glencoe for fourteen or fifteen days, when he received orders from his commanding officer, Major Duncanson, expressed in a manner which shows him to have been the worthy agent of the cruel Secretary. They were sent in conformity with orders of the same date, transmitted to Duncanson by Hamilton, directing that all the Mac Donalds under seventy years of age were to be cut off, and that the Government was not to be troubled with prisoners. Duncanson's orders to Glenlyon were as follows:—

" You are hereby ordered to fall upon the rebels, and put all to the sword under seventy. You are to have especial care that the old fox and his cubs do on no account escape your hands; you are to secure all the avenues, that no man escape. This you are to put in execution at four in the morning precisely, and by that time, or very shortly after, I will strive to be at you with a stronger party. But if I do not come to you at four, you are not to tarry for me, but fall on. This is by the King's special command, for the good and safety of the country, that these miscreants be cut off root and branch. See that this be put into execution without either fear or favour, else you may expect to be treated as not true to the King or Government, nor a man fit to carry a commission in the King's service. Expecting that you will not fail in the fulfilling hereof, as you love yourself, I subscribe these with my hand,

" ROBERT DUNCANSON."

This order was dated 12th February, and addressed, "For their Majesties' service, to Captain Robert Campbell of Glenlyon."

This letter reached Glenlyon soon after it was written; and he lost no time in carrying the dreadful mandate into execution. In the interval he did not abstain from any of those acts of familiarity which had lulled asleep the suspicions of his victims. He took his morning draught, as had been his practice every day since he came to the glen, at the house of Alaster Mac Donald, Mac Ian's second son, who was married to his (Glenlyon's) niece. He and two of his officers named Lindsay, accepted an invitation to dinner from Mac Ian himself, for the following day, on which they had determined he should never see the sun rise. To complete the sum of treachery, Glenlyon played at cards, in his own quarters, with the sons of Mac Ian, John and Alaster, both of whom were also destined for slaughter.

About four o'clock in the morning of 13th February, the scene of blood began. A party, commanded by one of the Lindsays, came to Mac Ian's house and knocked for admittance, which was at once given. Lindsay, one of the expected guests at the family meal of the day, commanded this party, who instantly shot Mac Ian dead by his own bed-side, as he was in the act of dressing himself, and giving orders for refreshments to be provided for his fatal visitors. His aged wife was stripped by the savage soldiery, who, at the same time, drew off the gold rings from her fingers with their teeth. She died the next day, distracted with grief, and the brutal treatment she had received. Several domestics and clansmen were killed at the same place.

The two sons of the aged chieftain had not been altogether so confident as their father respecting the peaceful and friendly purpose of their guests. They observed, on the evening preceding the massacre, that the sentinels were doubled, and the mainguard strengthened. John, the elder brother, had even overheard the soldiers muttering amongst themselves, that they cared not about fighting the men of the glen fairly, but did not like the nature of the service they were engaged in; while others consoled themselves with the military logic, that their officers must be answerable for the orders given, they having no choice save to obey them. Alarmed with what had been thus observed and heard, the young men hastened to Glenlyon's quarters, where they found that officer and his men preparing their arms. On questioning him about these suspicious appearances, Glenlyon accounted for them by a story that he was bound on an expedition against some of Glengarry's men; and alluding to the circumstance of their alliance, which made his own cruelty more detestable, he added, "If anything evil had been intended, would I not have told Alaster and my niece?"

Re-assured by this communication, the young men retired to rest, but were speedily awakened by an old domestic, who called on the two brothers to rise and fly for their lives. "Is it time for you," he said, "to be sleeping, when your father is murdered on his own hearth?" Thus roused, they hurried out in great terror, and heard throughout the glen, wherever there was a place of human habitation, the shouts of the murderers, the reports of the muskets, the screams of the wounded, and the groans of the dying. By their perfect knowledge of the scarce accessible cliffs amongst which they dwelt, they were enabled to escape observation, and fled to the southern access of the glen.

Meantime, the work of death proceeded with as little remorse as Stair himself could have desired. Even the slight mitigation of their orders respecting those above seventy years, was disregarded by the soldiery in their indiscriminate thirst for blood, and several very aged and bedridden persons were slain amongst others. At the hamlet where Glenlyon had his own quarters, nine men, including his landlord, were bound and shot like felons; and one of them, Mac Donald of Auchintriatten, had General Hill's passport in his pocket at the time. A fine lad of twenty had, by some glimpse of compassion on the part of the soldiers, been spared, when one Captain Drummond came up, and demanding why the orders were transgressed in that particular, caused him instantly to be put to death. A boy, of five or six years old, clung to Glenlyon's knees, entreating for mercy, and offering to become his servant for life, if he would spare him. Glenlyon was moved; but the same Drummond stabbed the child with his dirk, while he was in this agony of supplication.

At a place called Auchnalon, one Barber, a sergeant, with a party of soldiers, fired on a group of nine Mac Donalds, as they were assembled round their morning fire, and killed four of them. The owner of the house, a brother of the slain Auchintriaten, escaped unhurt, and expressed a wish to be put to death rather in the open air than within the house. "For your bread which I have eaten," answered Barber, "I will grant the request." Mac Donald was dragged to the door accordingly; but he was an active man, and when the soldiers were presenting their firelocks to shoot him, he cast his plaid over their faces, and taking advantage of the confusion, broke from them, and escaped up the glen.

The alarm being now general, many other persons, male and female, attempted their escape in the same manner as the two sons of Mac Ian and the person last mentioned. Flying from their burning huts, and from their murderous visitors, the half-naked fugitives committed themselves to a winter morning of darkness, snow, and storm, amidst a wilderness the most savage in the West Highlands, having a bloody death behind them, and before them tempest, famine, and desolation. Bewildered in the snow-wreaths, several sunk to rise no more. But the severities of the storm were tender mercies compared to the cruelty of their persecutors. The great fall of snow, which proved fatal to several of the fugitives, was the means of saving the remnant that escaped. Major Duncanson, agreeably to the plan expressed in his orders to Glenlyon, had not failed to put himself in motion, with four hundred men, on the evening preceding the slaughter; and, had he reached the eastern passes out of Glencoe by four in the morning, as he calculated, he must have intercepted and destroyed all those who took that only way of escape from Glenlyon and his followers. But as this reinforcement arrived so late as eleven in the forenoon, they found no Mac Donald alive in Glencoe, save an old man of eighty, whom they slew; and after burning such houses as were yet unconsumed, they collected the property of the tribe, consisting of twelve hundred head of cattle and horses, besides goats and sheep, and drove them off to the garrison of Fort William.

Thus ended this horrible deed of massacre. The number of persons murdered was thirty-eight; those who escaped might amount to a hundred and fifty males, who, with the women and children of the tribe, had to fly more than twelve miles through rocks and wildernessee ere they could reach any place of safety or shelter.

Page 304.

*"Stoutly have I fought
Upon King James's side; but with Dundee
His cause expired."*

"Dundee himself," says Sir Walter Scott, "contrary to the advice of the Highland chiefs, was in the front of the battle, and fatally conspicuous. Observing the stand made by two English regiments, he galloped towards the clan of Macdonald, and was in the act of bringing them to the charge, with his right arm elevated, as if pointing the way to victory, when he was struck by a bullet beneath the armpit, where he was unprotected by the cuirass. He tried to ride on, but being unable to keep the saddle, fell mortally wounded, and died in the course of that night. Such was the general opinion of his talents and courage, and the general sense of the peculiar crisis at which his death took place, that the common people of the low country cannot even now be persuaded that he died an ordinary death. They say that a servant of his own, shocked at the severities which, if triumphant, his master was likely to accomplish against the Presbyterians, and giving way to the popular prejudice of his having a charm against the effect of leaden balls, shot him in the tumult of the battle with a silver button taken from his livery coat. The Jacobites and Episcopalian party, on the other hand, lamented the deceased victor as the last of the Scots, the last of the Grahams, and the last of all that was great in his native country."—Tales of a Grandfather, chap. 56.

MINOR POEMS.

I.

EVENING SERVICE.

PERFORMED BY DR. VALPY AT READING SCHOOL.
—

THERE is a holy magic in that tone,
Can wake from memory's selectest cell
The hour when first upon my heart it fell
Like dew from Heaven :—the years that since have flown
Seem airy dreams ;—yet not of self alone
Those sacred strains are eloquent ;—they tell
Of numbers temper'd by their simple spell
In boyhood's unreflecting prime to own
Their kindred with their fellows—best of lore !—
Who to this spot, as Persians to the East,
Turn reverential thoughts from every shore
Which holds them ; nor forbear, till life has ceased,
With child-like love, a blessing to implore
On thee, great charity's unspotted priest !

II.

THE FORBURY, AT READING.

VISITED ON A MISTY EVENING IN AUTUMN.

SOFT uplands, that in boyhood's earliest days
Seem'd mountain-like and distant, fain once more
Would I behold you ! but the autumn hoar
Hath veil'd your pensive groves in evening haze ;
Yet must I wait till on my searching gaze
Your outline lives—more dear than if ye wore
An April sunset's consecrating rays—
For, even thus, the images of yore
Which ye awaken glide from misty years
Dream-like and solemn, and but half unfold
Their tale of glorious hopes, religious fears,
And visionary schemes of giant mould ;
Whose dimmest trace the world-worn heart reveres,
And, with love's grasping weakness, strives to hold.

III.

ON HEARING THE SHOUTS OF THE PEOPLE AT THE READING
ELECTION IN THE SUMMER OF 1826, AT A DISTANCE.
—

HARK ! from the distant town the long acclaim
On the charm'd silence of the evening breaks
With startling interruption ;—yet it wakes
Thought of that voice of never-dying fame
Which on my boyish meditation came
Here, at an hour like this ;—my soul partakes
A moment's gloom, that yon fierce contest slakes
Its thirst of high emprise and glorious aim :
Yet wherefore ? Feelings that from heaven are shed
Into our tenements of flesh, ally
Themselves to earthly passions, lest, unfed
By warmth of human sympathies, they die ;
And shall—earth's fondest aspirations dead—
Fulfil their first and noblest prophecy.

IV.

VIEW OF THE VALLEY OF READING.

FROM TILEHURST, AT THE CLOSE OF THE SAME ELECTION.

Too long have I regarded thee, fair vale,
But as a scene of struggle which denies
All pensive joy; and now with childhood's eyes
In old tranquillity, I bid thee hail;
And welcome to my soul thy own sweet gale,
Which wakes from loveliest woods the melodies
Of long-lost fancy—Never may there fail
Within thy circlet, spirits born to rise
In honour—whether won by freedom rude
In her old Spartan majesty, or wrought
With partial, yet no base regard, to brood
O'er usages by time with sweetness fraught;
Be thou their glory-tinted solitude,
The cradle and the home of generous thought!

V.

TO THE THAMES AT WESTMINSTER.

IN RECOLLECTION OF THE BANKS OF THE SAME RIVER, AT CAVERSHAM, NEAR READING.

—•—
WITH no cold admiration do I gaze
Upon thy pomp of waters, matchless stream !
But home-sick fancy kindles with the beam
That on thy lucid bosom faintly plays ;
And glides delighted through thy crystal ways,
Till on her eye those wave-fed poplars gleam,
Beneath whose shade her first ethereal maze
She fashion'd ; where she traced in clearest dream
Thy mirror'd course of wood-enshrined repose
Besprent with island haunts of spirits bright ;
And widening on—till, at the vision's close,
Great London, only then a name of might
For childish thought to build on, proudly rose
A rock-throned city clad in heavenly light.

VI.

TO THE SAME RIVER.

I MAY not emulate their lofty aim,
Who, in divine imagination, bold,
With mighty hills and streams communion hold,
As living friends ; and scarce I dare to claim
Acquaintance with thee in thy scenes of fame,
Wealthiest of rivers, though in days of old
I loved thee where thy waters sylvan roll'd,
And still would deem thee in thy pride the same !
So love perversely cleaves to some old mate
Estranged by fortune ; in his very pride
Seems lifted ; waxes in his greatness great ;
And silent hails the lot it prophesied,—
Content to think in manhood's palmy state
Some lingering traces of the child abide.

VII.

TO MR. MACREADY,

ON HIS PERFORMANCE OF WERNER, IN LORD BYRON'S TRAGEDY
OF THAT NAME.

O LEARNED in affection's thousand ways !
I thought thy art had proved its happiest power,
When thou didst bend above the opening flower
Of sweet Virginia's beauty, and with praise
Measured in words but fineless in the gaze
Of the proud sire, her gentle secret won :
Or when the patriot archer's hardy son
Was school'd by doting sternness for the hour
Of glorious peril ; but the just designs
Were ready ; now thy soul's affections glow,
By thy own genius train'd, through frigid lines,
And make a scorner's bloodless fancy show,
When love disdain'd round its cold idol twines,
How mighty are its weakness and its woe !

VIII.

FAME—THE SYMBOL AND PROOF OF IMMORTALITY.

THE names that slow oblivion have defied,
And passionate ambition's wildest shocks
Stand in lone grandeur, like eternal rocks,
To cast broad shadows o'er the silent tide
Of time's unebbing flood, whose waters glide,
To ponderous darkness from their secret spring,
And, bearing on each transitory thing,
Leave those old monuments in loneliest pride.
There stand they—fortresses uprear'd by man,
Whose earthly frame is mortal ; symbols high
Of power unchanging,—thought that cannot die :
Proofs that our nature mocks its earthly span,
And claims an essence by its God allied
To life and joy and love unperishing.

IX.

TO MR. MACREADY,

ON THE BIRTH OF HIS FIRST CHILD; IN RECOLLECTION OF HIS PERFORMANCE OF VIRGINIUS.

THERE is no father, who, with swimming eyes,
Has seen thee present life and passion lend
To scenes by simple-hearted poet penn'd,
Depicting household love in Roman guise,
Which, breathed through ancient forms, in freshness vies
With love of yesterday, who does not send
A greeting to thee as a new-bless'd friend,
Now thy own heart acknowledges the ties
Which skill, forestalling nature, made thee guess
With finest apprehension, and commend
To tearful crowds;—yet while the sweet excess
Of joy that thou hast passion'd forth, shall fill
Thy soul with all it dream'd of happiness,
May grief remain the artist's fiction still !

X.

TO CHARLES DICKENS,
ON HIS "OLIVER TWIST."

Not only with the author's happiest praise
Thy work should be rewarded ; 'tis akin
To DEEDS of men, who, scorning ease to win
A blessing for the wretched, pierce the maze
Which heedless ages spread around the ways
Where fruitful Sorrow tracks its parent Sin ;
Content to listen to the wildest din
Of passion, and on dismal shapes to gaze,
So they may earn the power which intercedes
With the bright world and melts it ; for within
Wan childhood's squalid haunts, where basest needs
Make tyranny more bitter, at thy call,
An angel face with patient sweetness pleads
For infant suffering to the heart of all.

XL

TO MISS ADELAIDE KEMBLE,

ON HER APPROACHING RETIREMENT FROM THE STAGE.
(DECEMBER, 1842.)

IF Time has doom'd the triumphs of thy race
With loss of thee—the youngest and the last—
To take majestic station in the Past,
We thank thee that thy fleeting hours embrace
Some hint of all its glories ;—bid us trace
In thy proud action the unconquer'd will
Of the great Roman ; own once more a thrill
Akin to that which blanch'd the childish face
At Siddons' whisper ; bless the honest grace
Which the true heart of chivalry should still
Shed o'er thy father's brow ;—consoled that all,
Thus waning into memory, grow more sweet,
And make their last expressions musical,
To live while any heart they hush shall beat.

XII.ON THE RECEPTION OF THE POET WORDSWORTH AT OXFORD (1839).

NEVER till now did mighty truth prevail
With such felicities of place and time,
As in those shouts sent forth with joy sublime
From the full heart of England's Youth, to hail
Her once neglected bard, within the pale
Of Learning's fairest Citadel! That voice,
In which the Future thunders bids rejoice
Some who through wintry fortunes did not fail
To bless with love as deep as life, the name
Thus welcomed ;—who, in happy silence, share
The triumph; while their fondest musings claim
Unhoped-for echoes in the joyous air,
That to their long-loved Poet's spirit bear
A Nation's promise of undying fame.

XIII.

THE MEMORY OF THE POETS.

THE fame of those pure bards whose fancies lie
Like glorious clouds in summer's calmest even,
Fringing the western skirts of darkening heaven,
And sprinkled o'er with hues of rainbow dye,
Awakes no voice of thunder, which may vie
With mighty chiefs' renown ;—from ages gone,
In low undying strain, it lengthens on,
The wildest solitudes with joy to fill,—
Felt breathing in the silence of the sky,
Or trembling in the gush of new-born rill,
Or whispering o'er the lake's unrippled breast ;
And, when all mortal voices shall be still,
Preserved to mingle earth-born ecstasy
With the calm rapture of eternal rest.

XIV.

ETON COLLEGE.

SURVEYED AFTER LEAVING A SON AT SCHOOL FOR THE FIRST TIME.

How often have I fix'd a stranger's gaze
On yon famed turrets, clad in light as fair
As this sweet evening lends, and felt the air
Of learning that from calm of ancient days
Breathes round them ever ! Now to me they wear
Hues drawn from dearer thought ; the radiant haze
That mantles them grows thick with fondest care,
And its slant sunbeams flicker like the praise
Youth wins from wisdom ;—for in yon retreats
One little student's heart expectant beats
With blood of mine ;—O God ! vouchsafe him power,
When I am dust, to stand on this sweet place,
And, through the vista of long years, embrace
With cloudless soul this first Etonian hour !

XV.

TO LORD DENMAN.

RESIGNING THE OFFICE OF LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

THERE is a rapture in the great All Hail
With which a nation honours thy repose,
That proves thy image deathless—that the close
Of man's remotest age, whose boyhood glows
While pondering o'er thy lineaments, shall fail
To delegate to cold historic tale
What DENMAN was ; for dignity that flows
Not in the moulds of compliment extern,
But from the noble spirit's purest urn,
Springs vital ; justice shrined from wintry flaw
By beautiful regards, and thoughts that burn
With generous ire, within the soul shall draw
No form but thine, when distant times would learn
The embodied majesty of England's Law.

XVI.

TO A LADY

VISITING CHAMOUNI, FOR THE FIRST TIME, FROM GENEVA.
—

MAY Nature's stateliest palace to your gaze
Expand in happiest lustre ! May the sun
Light into radiant joy the streams that run
Aslant the herbage of the rock-bound ways
Down which the strong Arve thunders ; may his rays
Spread myriad colours o'er the fount that springs
Aloft in watery dust, and leaping flings
A shadow scarce less earthly ! May no cloud
At eve on Europe's stainless summit rest
When roseate beauty lingering should attest
Its lone supremacy, which noon will fail
To vindicate,—or hint of cares to shroud
In after time that mirror in the breast
Which shall reflect the Mountain and the Vale ! .

XVII.

THE WESTMINSTER PLAY.
— • —

Not from the youth-illumined stage alone
Is gladness shed ; it breathes around from all
Whose names imprinted on each honour'd wall
Speak deathless boyhood ; on whose hearts the tone
That makes a classic phrase familiar grown
New by its crisp expression, seem to fall
From distant years ; while shouting striplings, still
On life's gay verge, make younger bosoms thrill
With proud delight which lately charm'd their own ;
While richest humour strangely serves to fill
Worn eyes with child-like tears ; for memory lifts
Time's curtain from the soul's remotest stage,
And sympathy makes strangers share the gifts
That clasp in golden meshes youth and age.

XVIII.

ON LOUGH'S STATUE OF LADY MACBETH.

If this great image were by ocean thrown
Among some people who have never yet
Learn'd in the mind's creations to forget
Life's pressure, and the melancholy stone
Were on a rock for savage wonder set,
Methinks some sense of Shakspeare's world unknown
Would dawn on spirits reverential grown
To strange divinity, as if they met
A bodied fragment of the poet's soul ;—
And while the spectral gaze and withering hand
Urge silence, such as that which death's control
Rules,—on the thoughts of that astonish'd band
Shapes from the noblest scenes by mortal plann'd
Would rise, and breathe the grandeur of the whole.

XIX.

RECOLLECTION OF THE LATE SIR M. A. SHEE, PRESIDING FOR THE LAST TIME AT THE FESTIVAL OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

IF in the fluttering music of that tongue
Some trace of years, through which its accents grew
Sweet amidst forms of beauty, should renew
An old regret that spirits ever young
Must, as they verge on regions whence they sprung,
Pay in expression's weaken'd force the due
To frail mortality by which alone
They speak to earth, our hearts attend its tone
With eagerness more rapt than when it flung
Abroad the vigorous truth by fancy's hue
Imbued—for, as the seeds from o'erblown flowers,
By autumn's gentle breath for spring are sown,
These trembling words, embraced by kindred powers,
Shall glow in pictures distant times shall own.

XX.

TO ROBERT BROWNING.

SUGGESTED BY A SUNSET OF UNUSUAL BEAUTY.

A MIGHTY sorrow gathers while the eye
Is by the sunset's waning glories fed,
For they recal the forms of poets dead,
Who with the first of mighty ages vie,
And lately veil'd by earth's horizon, shed
Sad beauty from beneath it ;—yet a power,
Like the pale moon that to their lustrous hour
Gave the meek tribute of a young ally
Felt more than own'd, consoling light should shower
From crystal urn that holds the precious dower
Of Browning's genius—which, when breezes rend
Fond clouds its lavish splendours glorify,
Made free of azure fields, its course shall wend
To high dominion in serenest sky.

LINES

WRITTEN AT THE NEEDLES HOTEL, ALUM BAY, ISLE OF WIGHT
AFTER A WEEK SPENT AT THAT PLACE.

How simple in their grandeur are the forms
That constitute this picture ! Nature grants
Scarce more than sternest cynic might desire—
Earth, Sea, and Sky, and hardly lends to each
Variety of colour; yet the soul
Asks nothing fairer than the scene it grasps
And makes its own for ever ! From the gate
Of this home-breathing Inn, which nestling cleaves
To its own shelf among the downs, begirt
With trees which lift no branches to defy
The fury of the storm, but crouch in love
Round the low snow-white walls whence they receive
More shelter than they lend,—the heart-sooth'd guest
Views a furze-dotted common, on each side
Wreathed into waving eminences, clothed
Above the furze with scanty green, in front
Indented sharply to admit the sea,
Spread thence in softest blue—to which a gorge
Sinking within the valley's deepening green
Invites by grassy path ; the Eastern down
Swelling with pride into the waters, shows
Its sward-tipp'd precipice of radiant white,

A A

And claims the dazzling peak beneath its brow
Part of its ancient bulk, which hints the strength
Of those famed pinnacles that still withstand
The conquering waves, as fortresses maintain'd
By death-devoted troops, hold out awhile
After the game is lost, to grace for ever
The virtue of the conquer'd.—Here are scarce
Four colours for the painter; yet the charm
Which permanence, 'mid earthly change, confers
Is felt, if ever, here; for he who loves
To bid the scene refresh his inward eye
When far away, may feel it keeping still
The very aspect that it wore for him,
Scarce changed by time or season: autumn finds
Scant boughs on which the lustre of decay
May tremble fondly; storms may rage in vain
Above the clumps of sturdy furze, which stand
The forest of the fairies; twilight grey
Finds in the landscape's stern and simple forms
Nought to conceal; the moon, although she casts
Upon the element she sways, a track
Like that which slanted through young Jacob's sleep
From heaven to earth, and flutter'd at the soul
Of shadow's mighty painter, who thence drew
Hints of a glory beyond shape, reveals
The clear-cut frame work of the sea and downs
Shelving to gloom, as unperplex'd with threads
Of pallid light, as when the summer's noon
Bathes them in sunshine; and the giant cliffs
Scarce veiling more their lines of flint that run
Like veins of moveless blue through glistening white,
In moonlight than in day, shall tower as now,

(Save when some moss's slender stain shall break
Into the samphire's yellow in mid air,
To tempt some trembling life) until the eyes
Which gaze in childhood on them shall be dim.

Yet deem not that these sober forms are all
That Nature here provides, although she frames
These in one lasting picture for the heart.
Within the foldings of the coast she breathes
Hues of fantastic beauty. Thread the gorge
And, turning on the beach, while the low sea
Spread out in mirror'd gentleness, allows
A path along the curving edge, behold
Such dazzling glory of prismatic tints
Flung o'er the lofty crescent, as assures
The orient gardens where Aladdin pluck'd
His jewell'd fruit no fable,—as if earth,
Provoked to emulate the rainbow's pomp
In lasting mould, had snatch'd its floating hues
And fix'd them here ; for never o'er the bay
Flew a celestial arch of brighter grace
Than the gay coast exhibits ; here the cliff
Flaunts in a brighter yellow than the stream
Of Tiber wafted ; then through softer shades
Declines to pearly white, which blushes soon
With pink as delicate as autumn's rose
Wears on its scattering leaves ; anon the shore
Recedes into a fane-like dell, where stain'd
With black, as if with sable tapestry hung,
Light pinnacles rise taper : further yet
Swells out in solemn mass a dusky veil
Of purpled crimson,—while bright streaks of red
Start out in gleam-like tint, to tell of veins

Which the slow-winning sea, in distant times,
Shall bare to unborn gazers.

If this scene
Grow too fantastic for thy pensive thought,
Climb either swelling down, and gaze with joy
On the blue ocean, pour'd around the heights,
As it embraced the wonders of that shield
Which the doom'd friend of slain Patroclus wore,
To grace his fated valour ; nor disdain
The quiet of the vale, though not endow'd
With such luxurious beauty as the coast
Of Undercliff embosoms. 'Mid those lines
Of scanty foliage, thoughtful lanes and paths,
And cottage roofs, find shelter ; the blue stream,
That with its brightness almost threads the isle,
Flows blest with two grey towers, beneath whose shade
The village life sleeps trustfully,—whose rites
Touch the old weather-harden'd fisher's heart
With child-like softness, and shall teach the boy
Who kneels, a sturdy grandson, at his side,
When his frail boat amidst the breakers strikes,
To cast the anchor of a Christian's hope
In an unripled haven. Then rejoice,
That in remotest point of this sweet isle,
Which with fond mimicry combines each shape
Of the great land that, by the ancient bond
(Sea-parted once, and sea-united now),
Binds her in unity—a Spirit breathes
On cliff, and tower, and valley, by the side
Of cottage-fire, and the low grass-grown grave,
Of Home on English earth, and Home in Heaven !

VERSES

TO THE MEMORY OF A CHILD, WHO, NAMED AFTER CHARLES LAMB, DIED
A YEAR AFTER HIM, AT BRIGHTON.

OUR gentle Charles has pass'd away
From earth's short bondage free,
And left to us its leaden day
And mist-enshrouded sea.

Here, by the ocean's terraced side,
Sweet hours of hope were known,
When first the triumph of its tide
Seem'd omen of our own.

That eager joy the sea-breeze gave,
When first it raised his hair,
Sunk with each day's retiring wave,
Beyond the reach of prayer.

The sun-blink that through drizzling mist,
To flickering hope akin,
Lone waves with feeble fondness kiss'd.
No smile as faint can win ;

Yet not in vain with radiance weak
The heavenly stranger gleams—
Not of the world it lights to speak,
But that from whence it streams.

That world our patient sufferer sought,
Serene with pitying eyes,
As if his mounting spirit caught
The wisdom of the skies.

With boundless love it look'd abroad
For one bright moment given,
Shone with a loveliness that awed,
And quiver'd into Heaven.

A year made slow by care and toil
Has paced its weary round,
Since death enrich'd with kindred spoil
The snow-clad, frost-ribb'd ground.

Then LAMB, with whose endearing name
Our boy we proudly graced,
Shrank from the warmth of sweeter fame
Than ever bard embraced.

Still 'twas a mournful joy to think
Our darling might supply,
For years to us, a living link
With name that cannot die.

And though such fancy gleam no more
On earthly sorrow's night,
Truth's nobler torch unveils the shore
Which lends to both its light.

The nurseling there that hand may take
None ever grasp'd in vain,
And smiles of well-known sweetness wake,
Without their tinge of pain.

Though, 'twixt the child and childlike bard
Late seem'd distinction wide,
They now may trace, in Heaven's regard,
How near they were allied.

Within the infant's ample brow
Blythe fancies lay unfurl'd,
Which all uncrush'd may open now
To charm a sinless world.

Though the soft spirit of those eyes
Might ne'er with LAMB's compete—
Ne'er sparkle with a wit as wise,
Or melt in tears, as sweet,

The nurseling's unforgotten look
A kindred love reveals,
With his who never friend forsook,
Or hurt a thing that feels.

In thought profound, in wildest glee,
In sorrow's lengthening range,
His guileless soul of infancy
Endured no spot or change.

From traits of each our love receives
For comfort nobler scope ;
While light which childlike genius leaves
Confirms the infant's hope :

And in that hope with sweetness fraught
Be aching hearts beguiled,
To blend in one delightful thought
The Poet and the Child.

APPENDIX.

NOTICE OF THE LATE DR. VALPY,

PREFIXED INSTEAD OF DEDICATION TO THE FIRST PUBLISHED
EDITION OF ION.

IN offering this attempt at dramatic composition to the public at large, I am mournfully reminded of an irreparable loss by the necessity of omitting a Dedication to one whose name should have graced its opening page. The two Editions which have been privately circulated were inscribed to my venerable and indulgent friend, DR. VALPY, upon whose long life of kindness Death has since set the final seal. When I ventured to claim for it his protection, I well knew that I might rely upon that charity which lavished its bounties upon every effort of his pupils, for tenderness to its faults, and for generous praise of any merits which the keenest eye of friendship might detect or create. There was also a propriety in seeking this association for a work which was prompted by love of those remains of antique beauty which he had taught me to know and to revere; which assumed that form of poetry in which he had chiefly delighted; and which, although meditated in broken hours, and at long intervals, had always mingled with the recollections of those happy days, when he first awakened within me the sense of classical grace, and of those after-seasons, when the exquisite representations of Greek

Tragedy, which he superintended, made its images vital. He is gone to his rest full of years and honours; and I cannot receive from him that sanction which he cordially gave me when I presented this drama to my friends, now that I submit it to the judgment of a wider and more impartial circle. Death, which harmonises the pictures of human character, found little in his to spiritualise or to soften; but if it has not enhanced the feeling of his excellences in the minds of those who felt their influence, it has enabled them to express that feeling without the semblance of flattery. It has left them free not only to expatiate on those well-directed labours which have facilitated the access of the young to the elements of sound learning; on the solemn and persuasive tone of his pulpit eloquence; on the steadiness of his attachment to principles adopted with caution, expressed with moderation, yet maintained without a sigh at the cost of the emoluments and honours to which they were obstacles; but also to revert to that remarkable kindness of disposition which was the secret but active law of his moral being. His nature was not ameliorated nor even characterised, but wholly moulded of Christian love to an entireness of which there are few examples. He had no sense of injury, but as something to be forgiven. The liberal allowance which he extended to all human frailties grew more active when they affected his own interests, and interfered with his own hopes; so that, however he might reprobate evil at a distance, as soon as it came within his sphere he desired only to overcome it by good. Envy, hatred, and malice, were to him mere names, like the figures of a speech in a schoolboy's theme, or the giants in a fairy tale—phantoms which scarcely touched him with a transient sense of reality. His guileless simplicity of heart was not preserved in learned seclusion, or by a constant watchfulness over the development of youthful powers, (for he found time to mingle frequently in the blameless gaieties and the stirring business of life,) but by the happy constitution of his own nature, which passion could rarely disturb, and evil had no power to stain. His system of education was animated by a portion of his own spirit: it was framed to enkindle and to quicken the best affections, and to render emulation itself subservient to the generous friendships which it promoted. His charity in its comprehensiveness, resembled nothing less than the imagination of the greatest of our poets, embracing everything human; shedding its light upon the just and the unjust; detecting "the soul of goodness in things evil;" stealing rigidity from virtue; bringing into gentle relief those truths which are of aspect the most benign, and those suggestions and hopes which are most full of consolation; and attaching itself, in all the various departments of life, to individuals whose childhood it had fostered; in whose merits its own images were multiplied, or whose errors and sorrows supplied the materials of its most quick and genial action. The hold which the Reading school-boy had upon this charity could not be forfeited, even "by slights, the worst of injuries;" and when broken in fortune, deserted by relatives, and frowned on by the world, he had only to seek the hospitable roof of his old master—"claim kindred there, and have his claims allow'd." By the spirit of cordiality which breathed there, all party differences were melted away, or, if perceived at all, served only to render tolerance more vivid; and men of all opinions and all ranks met under his auspices, at the annual School-meetings, to enjoy the happiest hours of the year, now the dearest to memory.

The completion of the fiftieth year of Doctor Valpy's Mastership of Reading School, which he was about to resign into the hands of his youngest son, afforded an opportunity to his pupils of embodying their sentiments of grateful affection in a substantial form which could not be lost. A splendid service of plate had, many years before, been presented to the lovely and excellent wife of whom death had long deprived him ; and the precedent was now followed, under still more affecting circumstances, in honour of the survivor. The subscription, limited to a guinea, had been filled by more than two hundred and fifty of his old scholars ; and long after the completion of their purpose, other subscriptions arrived from distant parts of the world, which the intelligence had reached, too late to enable the subscribers to express their wish in time to share in the gift before it was presented. The central piece of plate—a beautiful copy of the most beautiful of all vases, "the Warwick," bore the following inscription :—To the Rev. Richard Valpy, D.D., who for the long space of Fifty Years presided over Reading School, distinguished for his piety and learning, this testimony of respect and affection was presented by his grateful Scholars, on the 19th October, 1830. The time fixed for the presentation was the close of one of those Triennial Visitations of the school, which had been so often illustrated by a representation of Greek Tragedy, unrivalled for correctness of costume, sweetness of enunciation, and graceful simplicity of action ; but which was now to be marked by a reality of interest more deep, and to be followed by recollections yet more sacred. Mr. Baron Bolland had been selected by the Committee managing the subscription, to present the Testimonial, and most readily acquiesced in their wishes, but was detained by domestic circumstances in a distant part of the country ; and, having cherished to the last possible moment the hope of performing his delightful duty, was obliged to resign it. Under these circumstances, I was so fortunate as to be requested to supply his place, and to be honoured by the opportunity of feebly expressing sentiments every one present knew to be the simple truth. The School-Room, which Dr. Valpy had erected out of his own funds, was the scene of the breakfast and presentation, at which nearly two hundred persons were seated, exclusive of the real school-boys, who occupied their own desks lining the room. The plate was exhibited on the desk at which the Master had presided for the last half century; and as soon as the company had assembled, was presented to Dr. Valpy in the following Address, which, with the Reply, I copy from the Reading Newspapers of the following Saturday.

"In the absence of your distinguished Scholar, who should have been the organ of our sentiments to-day, but who has been detained in a distant part of the country, I have been suddenly called to the high and unmerited honour of representing that large body of your pupils who now offer to you this little token of their affection and gratitude. In this pleasure there are more than 250 sharers—men scattered through different parts of this and other countries, but all acknowledging one home of their early hopes, loves, and joys, to which their thoughts have often delightedly reverted, and to which they have themselves been ever welcomed with boundless hospitality and unfailing kindness;—men of ages varying through a large portion of human life, yet all alike young in the vivid perception of the happy days they spent under your care;—men of far different avocations and degrees of this world's wealth and esteem, but all equal in that great treasure of imperishable recollection, over which its changes have no power, and in those principles of integrity and honour which have been instilled into them here;—of opinions various as those of freemen will become in a free country, on the greatest subjects of inquiry, but all animated by one sentiment of regard for the institution in which they were fostered, and for him who has raised and adorned it through fifty years. In your kind and partial eyes—ever used to look indulgently on our imperfect performances—this gift, we well know, will not be esteemed lightly; but we offer it with an almost painful sense how inadequate it is to betoken our feelings towards you, and how powerless are all words to express them. If in any place we should feel the insufficiency of language to convey our thoughts and wishes, how must this sense press upon our minds in the place where I have the pleasure to address you? Here all around has a silent eloquence beyond that of words; every old familiar object has a speech and a language; the years long past are rushing by us,— “Here have your peaceful successes been achieved; here have we shared in the blessings of an education in which learning and charity met together; here have our minds been led along, not the straight and barren ‘march of intellect,’ but its easy, varied, and delightful journey; here have we listened (on how many Sabbath evenings!) to precepts which the virtues and labours of the week exemplified, and which fell upon the hearts of joyous and unthinking boyhood in tones fit to awaken its first sympathy with human infirmity and sorrow. Here we hail and welcome you on the close of fifty years of toils on which the seal of time is already set; and we rejoice to believe that here that system of instruction, in which the charities of life are interwoven, will yet long be vital, as administered by one who is endeared to us by a double tie, as our schoolfellow and your son; who has emulated your learning and your fame; and who, we trust, through many years, will here impart to others those lessons which he has learned so well, and infuse into our children and children’s children the principles and feelings which he, together with us, has derived from his father!

‘And more than echoes talk along the walls.’

“And now, dear and honoured Master, accept this offering, with our earnest wishes and prayers that you may yet long be spared to us! As your season of labour has been protracted beyond the usual period in which man is called to work, so may your season of repose be long and happy! Long, very long, may you live to enjoy the store of triumphant recollections that your life has gathered ! Long, very long may you live to share in our successes and to rejoice in our joy ! Long, very long, may you exult in the consciousness that you have done as much good, that you have diffused as much happiness, and, allow me to add, that you have excited as much veneration and love, as any individual of your time ! May God preserve and bless you !”

Doctor Valpy replied as follows :—

“Great griefs are silent—so are great joys. There are occasions on which the remembrance of friends snatched from us recurs with fresh bitterness. Some years ago a similar tribute was paid to that dear saint in heaven, my lamented wife. If ever there was a woman adored by all who knew her, it was this object of my affection. I appeal to you, who knew her, whether I have overcharged this picture. If spirits have any sense of what is passing below, that blessed spirit is now hovering over you, whom she loved. I do not know that I can prove that spirits of departed friends are sensible of our actions, but it is an idea from which I have gained much comfort in many a trying hour. I heartily wish those husbands and wives who hear me may never feel such a privation, until they reach a ripened age. I cannot accept this tribute of your affection without sensations such as no language I have ever learned can describe. My pilgrimage has been accompanied with many thorns, and illumined with some few flowers; but this is the fairest flower, that has adorned my path. I cannot say more. You say this is a tribute of your gratitude; but on the present occasion the debt of gratitude becomes due, not from you to me, but from me to you.”

A few tranquil years passed by Dr. Valpy chiefly in visits to the families of his numerous children, closed a life happily prolonged to the age of fourscore.

LONDON:
BRADBURY AND EVANS, PRINTERS, WHITEFRIARS.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

—•—

Third Edition, price 5s. cloth,

VACATION RAMBLES;

COMPRISING

THE RECOLLECTIONS OF THREE CONTINENTAL TOURS, IN THE VACATIONS OF 1841, 1842, AND 1843.

BY SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, D.C.L.

EDWARD MOXON, DOVER STREET.

Mr.
Wright

Digitized by Google

